Cutter Smashing Way Through Ice To Aid Islanders

Postmaster of Tangier's Colony Flies Here, Says All's Well.

40 Families Need Money for Food

Anxiety Over Health Is Lessened as Doctor Reaches Village.

Operating under full power, the Diesel-motored Coast Guard cutter Travis was nearing isolated Tangier Island and her 1,500 marooned inhabitants last night prepared to break a channel through the last 2 miles of ice cutting the fishermen and their families off from the outside world.

The Travis, a 125-foot craft, was summoned by the Coast Guard from her base at Moorhead City, N. C., after the Unaga, a larger cutter, had pushed as close to the island as the depth of the bay would permit her.

She was expected to be 2 miles off the island by dawn. This morning she will begin to complete the channel, through which large supplies of food, utensils and medical supplies may be rushed from Norfolk to aid the island folk to combat one of the worst winters in their memories.

As the hardy islanders, reputedly descended from 14 generations of sturdy Cornish fishermen, made the best of things after more than two weeks isolation, reports from Tangier indicated they were in no danger of starvation, and that health in general was "good."

Postmaster Flies Here.

V. L. Spence, weather-beaten, wind-burned postmaster at Tangier, came by airplane to Washington yesterday to confer with Red Cross officials. He stated there were approximately 40 families whose financial means did not allow them to purchase a supply of foodstuffs sufficient to last more than a few days.

The health situation on the island is well under control, he pointed out, with a doctor on hand to give medical attention to the few who are sick.

The physician, from nearby Smiths Island, who had been marooned in Crisfield since the Chesapeake froze over, was taken to the island by airplane yesterday and had the situation well in hand.

The postmaster went on the air last night over a local radio station to thank the people of Washington for the help they had given his neighbors. Though his answers to the radio interviewer's questions were almost entirely confined to "yes" and "no," he expanded for reporters later.

Two Weeks' Limit.

"In case of dire necessity," he said, "we could last for about two weeks longer on what food we already have.

"I don't believe the Coast Guard ice cutters will do any good. The ice is so thick it would take a large boat to get through, and a large boat could not get nearer than 2 miles off shore. It would be unsafe for parties to go out that far on foot to drag in what food the boats would bring.

"On the other hand, planes can land easily on Tangier Creek, and I think a plane twice a week bringing food would be all we will need until the thaw comes. It will take about two weeks of sunshine to clear away the ice, but two days and nights of rain and fog would do it.

"The main problem about bringing food to the island is in distributing it. Unless it is consigned to some particular person, the crowd gets it, and it may fall into the hands of those who need it least."

"We aren't going to starve at all," said Spence slowly. "We were mighty glad to get help, though, because things were running low.

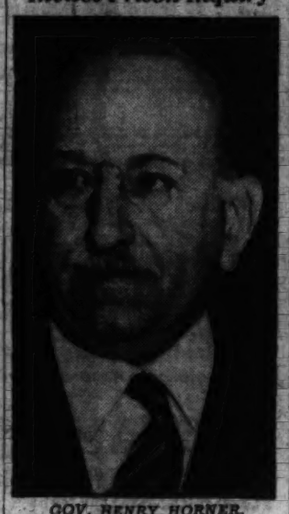
Invites Prison Inquiry



GOV. HENRY HORNER.

Prison Inquiry, Sequel to Loeb Death, Planned

Bates, Lawes Among 16 Asked by Horner to Aid Investigation.

By the United Press.

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 3.—Gov. Henry Horner tonight asked 16 prominent citizens in all parts of the Nation to serve on a committee to conduct a "thorough and impartial investigation" of charges of irregularities in State prison administration precipitated by the murder of Richard Loeb at Stateville Prison last Tuesday.

Sanford Bates, director of Federal prisons at Washington, and Warden Lewis Lawes, of Sing Sing Prison, were among those asked to serve.

Horner announced his plan after a five-hour conference with A. L. Bowen, State superintendent of public welfare, who has made several trips to the Stateville Prison at Joliet since the Loeb murder.

Cites Tragedy.

"I have determined upon a thorough investigation of all policies and methods in vogue in the administration of our penal institutions and their practical application," he said in letters addressed to the 16. "Here in our own State the recent tragedy in Stateville Prison has resulted in a question in the minds of some of our citizens regarding the management of our prison system."

In addition to Bates and Lawes, the list included:

State's Attorney Thomas J. Courtney, of Chicago; Warden Roy Best, of the Canon City, Colo., Penitentiary, president of the United States Wardens Association; Warden Oscar Lee, of the Waupun, Wis., State Prison; Prof. Robert Miller, of Northwestern University Law School; Dr. Preston Bradley, Chicago minister; State Senator James J. Barbour, Evanston, Ill.

Bishop Named.

Albert D. Lasker, Chicago, former president of the United States Shipping Board; Mark D. Cressup, Chicago business man; Circuit Judge John F. Prystalski, Chicago, and Robert L. Kern, editor of the Belleville, Ill., News-Democrat.

The Governor's announcement swung the spotlight from Joliet, where State's Attorney Will R. McCabe today secured an order from Circuit Judge Edwin L. Wilson to empanel the Will County grand jury February 17 to indict Convict James Day on charges of murdering Loeb.

Does Congress Need More Power . . .?

SHOULD the power of the Supreme Court to nullify Federal legislation by a 5 to 4 vote be curbed . . . by Constitutional amendment . . . making a 6 to 3, or 7 to 2, vote necessary before an act of Congress may be declared unconstitutional?

Cold Record Of the 90's To Fall Today

Sub-Freezing Weather 13th Straight Day Will Set Mark.

Many Are Injured Here in Series of Mishaps on Icy Streets.

Icy streets and windshields paralyzed Washington traffic yesterday and last night. An all-time record for protracted cold waves is expected to be shattered today, with the thermometer below freezing for the thirteenth straight day.

Several persons were injured in a series of accidents.

The Weather Bureau predicted rain today and colder weather tonight. It is due to be fair and even colder tomorrow.

As snow and rain made traffic everywhere hazardous, street cars were tied up and automobiles skidded. Many thousands of homegoing office workers and shoppers were delayed as motorists crawled cautiously and pedestrians watched every step, lest they slip and fall.

Cars Tied Up.

Street car service was impaired late in the afternoon.

Several tie-ups occurred in the downtown area, in the heart of the business district, where long lines of trams crept foot by foot until traffic jams and slippery rails could be surmounted.

Six automobiles bumped together in the 3000 block of Q street northwest, and a man was injured slightly in a minor crash at First and V streets northwest. Police cars were busy unsnarling the difficulties caused by the snow and cold. Everywhere traffic was a sliding, skidding, slipping, slow process—dangerous to life and limb.

Melba Simmons, 35, suffered a sprained back and possible concussion of the brain yesterday when a taxicab in which she was a passenger, collided with an automobile operated by John A. Metz, of 1620 D street northwest.

The taxicab reportedly was operated by Salvator D. Emelio, of 213 F street northeast. The accident occurred on Constitution avenue near Third street. The injured woman was taken to Casualty Hospital.

Pedestrian Injured.

George Donaldson, 22, of 1321 I street northeast, suffered a possible fractured leg and back when he was hit by an automobile in the 800 block of Florida avenue northwest. He was taken to Casualty Hospital. The automobile was said to have been operated by Charles R. Ourand, of 1339 Childress street northeast.

Victor Ledered, 4, of Camp Springs, Md., was injured in a crash at Pennsylvania avenue near Alabama avenue southeast. He was riding in an automobile operated by his mother, Mrs. Charles Ledered, when it was in collision with a machine operated by Donald J. Stewart, of 811 L street northeast.

Charles A. Kaschub, 69, of 222 Third street southeast, was struck by an automobile at Third street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast and was taken to Providence Hospital suffering from a possible skull fracture.

Taken to Station.

The automobile was operated by Linden H. Kidwell, 27, of 30 Ninth street southeast, police said. He was taken to the Ninth Precinct station.

The record which is expected to fall today was established in February, 1895, in days when cable cars and horses provided the only traffic problems of consequence. The highest mark reached in the District's current cold snap has been 30 degrees, attained at 4 p. m. Sunday.

Yesterday's high mark was a comparatively mild 24 at 4 p. m., and ice skaters were banned from the river by Park Police, who sent them to the Mirror Pool. The minimum yesterday was 20, recorded at 8:30 a. m.

Officials explained last night that the severity of the cold wave has not been as consistent as that of the winter of 1917-1918, but its duration has been longer.

Some residents of Arlington County looked with apprehension at the growing ice mass in the Potomac, at Great Falls, fearing a sud-

Diplomats of 8 Nations Seek Barrier to German Expansion

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Paris, Feb. 3.—The spectre of Germany's rising military might tonight dominated one of the largest informal diplomatic gatherings since the World War.

So acute is the desire of France and Central European nations to curb the German threat that they today shelved the proposed Danubian pact and the question of a Hapsburg restoration in Austria in favor of earnest conferences designed to procure collective security against feared German expansion.

Central European rulers and high diplomats who attended King George's funeral almost all returned here and began informal conversations on their problems. Eight nations were represented tonight.

The conversations deal with many subjects, political and economic, but the common fear of militant Germany promptly steered the conferences to the French-fostered chain of mutual assistance pacts for protection against possible German aggression at their principal topic.

These things, any one of which may in time change the map of Europe, were discussed:

1. Possible German fortification of the demilitarized Rhineland zone, and protective measures against German expansion which the threatened nations believe would be sure to follow.

2. A Danubian pact to protect the integrity of Central European small nations, with Russia invited to take the place formerly destined for Italy.

3. Restoration of Otto of Hapsburg to the Austrian throne as a means of checking German ambitions in this direction.

Wool on Cartridge May Save Boy's Life

Detroit, Feb. 3 (U.P.).—Surgeons tonight based hopes for recovery of a 12-year-old boy on a bullet that cut into his brain, carrying with it a piece of wool that "bandaged" a severed vein and stopped flow of blood.

Dr. E. S. Gurdjian, surgeon who removed three fragments of cartridge from the head of the boy, Henry Wilcoxen, said the bullet itself and the wad of wool were effecting their own "cure."

Henry was wounded in the head as he watched a companion shoot at tin cans and bottles with a small rifle. The bullet bored through the turned-up collar of Henry's sheepskin jacket, its jagged-edge tearing away a piece of the heavy wool lining.

The bullet severed the lateral sinus, a major vein in the head, but the wool immediately stopped the flow of blood. Without this "bandage," Dr. Gurdjian said, Henry undoubtedly would have bled to death.

Export Started Of $5,600,000 In Gold Bullion

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 3.—Machinery was set in motion today to export $5,600,000 of gold from New York in the first outward movement of the metal since September, 1934.

Further weakness in the dollar in foreign exchange dealings was brought on, banking quarters said, by congressional inflation bloc moves at Washington.

Rates for the French franc and the pound sterling reached levels last seen in August and September, 1934, and The Netherlands guilder and the Swiss franc also were at a point permitting shipments of metal from New York at a profit.

More than $5,000,000 of the gold shipments arranged were said at the Treasury to be destined for Paris, and around $400,000 was to be consigned to Amsterdam.

Profit Margin Small.

Profit margins on the exports at current rates for the French franc and the guilder, it was reported in banking quarters, were quite small.

The movements were thought by some monetary experts to have been arranged as a sort of financial gesture to make it clear that gold could be obtained from the U. S. Treasury when rates justified.

Importance was attached by money market circles to unofficial reports from Paris that French authorities were about to complete arrangements for a government credit in the form of pound sterling balances in London.

Would Support Franc.

Such a credit, it was said, would measurably increase the ability of French fiscal authorities to maintain the external value of the franc.

This report, bankers here said, helped to push the franc forward against the dollar, especially since the latter was under pressure because of inflation talk here and abroad.

The pound sterling closed up 2½ cents at $5.03¾, and French francs were .00¾ of a cent higher at 6.69½ cents. Guilders rose .02 of a cent at 68.78 cents, and Swiss francs were .05 of a cent ahead at 33.04 cents.

Guilders progressed less rapidly than other gold units in relation to the dollar, following the action of the Bank of The Netherlands in lowering the discount rate to 2½ per cent from 3 per cent.

Tax Plans Awaited.

By the Associated Press.

Congressional leaders with an eye to growing demands for inflation, looked directly toward the White House last night for signs of an official Presidential pronouncement on tax plans for the session.

Out of the general confusion at the Capitol as to the final outcome of the tax-inflation situation, two impressions emerged. There was a general understanding that the President would call his advisors into conference, probably later in the week, to outline his tax views.

Secondly, word was circulated that Mr. Roosevelt had reached no final decision as to whether new taxes to liquidate the bonus would be asked at this time, and that such a request might be deferred.

The understanding prevailed

30 Hurt as Train Skids on Icy Rails

Jersey City, N. J., Feb. 3 (U.P.).—Thirty passengers were injured and scores shaken up tonight when a Pennsylvania Railroad train crashed into a bumper at the end of a track after skidding on slippery rails.

Windows in cars were shattered. Many were cut by flying glass. Eleven were taken to St. Francis Hospital for treatment.

The train, a Trenton local, consisting of three coaches and an electric engine, was backing up from Exchange Place Terminal, when someone signaled it to stop. The motorman applied brakes, but the wheels skidded on ice-coated rails and the train crashed into a heavy steel bumper.

Only one passenger was seriously hurt. Ten others were treated at the hospital and dismissed. Nineteen refused treatment, although they were cut and bruised.

High Court Delays Ruling On the TVA

Brandeis and Sutherland Reported Drafting 'Split' Opinion.

$10,000,000 State Tax Levy on Railroad Is Invalidated.

By Robert C. Albright.

Fate of TVA, high on the list of alphabetical agencies under Supreme Court review, yesterday was left to at least another week of speculative suspense, as the high tribunal again upset predictions by passing over an opportunity to rule on Federal power sales.

Taking under scrutiny another New Deal law, the securities act of 1933, justices reeled off fifteen decisions, but a tiny courtroom, jammed with notables, received not the slightest hint of the court's attitude toward the Tennessee Valley power "yardstick" experiment.

Rumors spread that both Justice Brandeis and Justice Sutherland were preparing opinions on the TVA case, leading to prophecies of another "split" ruling, but the reports were based on the merest conjecture, unsubstantiated by any spoken or written word.

Brandeis an Hour Late.

An audible murmur ran through the courtroom as Justice Brandeis, who closely questioned witnesses on jurisdictional issues in the TVA suit, took his seat at the bench an hour late. But as time passed it became apparent that Brandeis, alone of the justices, had no opinions to deliver for the court—yesterday.

The court added the securities act of 1933 to its New Deal docket, on petition of J. Edward Jones, New York broker, who charged the law is unconstitutional because it invades the States' sphere of regulation.

Jones had asked for permission to sell $100,000 trust participation certificates in oil wells, but when the Securities and Exchange Commission questioned his statements, sought to withdraw his application. The commission objected and the fight was carried to the court.

James M. Beck, former Republican Solicitor General, a member of the American Liberty League and one of Jones' attorneys, was among interested spectators when the court convened yesterday. Beck represented minority stockholders of the Alabama Power Co. when the TVA case was argued more than seven weeks ago.

Significant to railroads and taxpayers generally was a six to three decision of the court yesterday taking "judicial notice" of the decline in securities and property values precipitated by the depression.

Relief from "excessive" tax assessments imposed by the North Dakota State tax commissioner was granted the Great Northern Railway Co. by the court, which held the road's properties had been overassessed by at least $10,000,000 by State authorities, who did not allow for depression losses.

The following were outstanding among decisions handed down yesterday by the court:

Kidnaping an officer to avoid arrest was held in violation of the Federal Lindbergh kidnaping law, in the court's first finding affecting that statute. The decision turned down an appeal by Arthur Gooch, sentenced to death for aiding in kidnaping two policemen at Paris, Tex., and transporting them into Oklahoma.

Tax Preferred Stock.

The court unanimously decided that a State may tax preferred bank stock owned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in a ruling applying specifically to Baltimore National Bank stock held by the RFC, but extending more generally to about $900,000,000 of preferred bank stock, notes and debentures owned by the RFC.

Reversing a ruling of the Louisiana State Supreme Court, justices unanimously held unconstitutional the provisions of a 1932 Louisiana law making retroactive changes in the method of paying off withdrawing members of building and loan associations.

Eight of the nine robed justices took their places at the bench as the court convened at noon, to face a courtroom packed to capacity and charged with expectancy. Members of the high court knew why every nook and cranny of the hall was filled. The crowd had come to hear the court's verdict on TVA. Would it follow NRA and AAA into the limbo of extinct Federal agencies?

One after another, justices took their turn in reading important findings of the court. An air of tenseness gripped the chamber as each began to speak, then lapsed into a ripple of whispers as it became apparent that none of these was the case spectators had come to hear.

Boy Buried Alive, Forgotten, Dies as Friend in Pit Is Saved

By the Associated Press.

Seal Beach, Calif., Feb. 3.—Jackie Ward's sobbing playmates told today how the 8-year-old boy was buried alive, forgotten and crushed to death while they frantically burrowed in the sand to save a companion.

They thought he had gone home.

Seven boys, the oldest 14, dug a sandhill cave near Anaheim Landing several days ago. But recent rains weakened the earth and yesterday the cave collapsed, burying them.

Five, caught near the entrance, quickly freed themselves.

"Boys, we've got to get Bill out," said Stewart Lawhead.

So he and his four playmates, digging with their hands, slowly tunneled their way to Billy Taylor, 10. They tore the earth from his bleached face and pulled him free so he could breath. He was choking.

"It's a good thing Jackie went home," someone said. Then Billy got his breath.

"He didn't," Billy gasped. "He's right here beside me."

Frantically the boys dug in again but Jackie was dead when they reached him.

Congressional Leaders Act to Kill 3 Farm Laws At President's Request

Green Fails to Make His Point

Harris & Ewing.

William Green (left), president of the A. F. of L., tries to impress John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, with the point that there should be no division of organized labor. The delegates to the U. M. W. convention shouted down the request.

Only 3 of 1,700 Miners Approve Green's Plea for United A. F. L.

His face beet-red with the strain of pleading, his voice cracking with emotion, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, yesterday pleaded, cajoled and threatened 1,700 delegates to the United Mine Workers of America convention to cause them to stay with the parent organization and heard himself and his pleas booed and roared down in dramatic defeat.

At the end of a speech lasting 1 hour and 45 minutes, Green sat down, his legs trembling from the exhaustion of his vigorous demand that the mine workers cease agitating for industrial unionism, as grim-jawed John L. Lewis, president of the miners, arose and said:

"Any delegate who has had his views changed by the speech of President Green will please arise."

Three lone men in the vast tense audience of nearly 2,000 people stood up amid fierce shouts of "Sit down!"

Then Lewis asked all those who would assent to Green's demand that the committee for industrial organization be dissolved to stand up. No one stood.

Lewis then asked all those who defied Green's "ultimatum" to stand. The entire mass of men jumped to their feet, shouting and whistling, waving fists and hats.

Grave-faced and stern, biting off the words that would act to split even farther the most powerful single union in America from its great parent body, the square-built, shock-maned mine leader turned to Green on the platform and said, gesturing at the shouting men:

"You have the answer of the United Mine Workers of America to your ultimatum."

"It is not for the president of the United Mine Workers to amplify with mere words so deep seated and pronounced an answer.

"You came as an ambassador from another organization. While here, I trust you have been treated with all the respect due an ambassador. But now you have, and you may carry back to your organization, the answer of the United Mine Workers of America."

The issue, more and more clearly drawn recently, was between the industrial union beliefs of the United Mine Workers and the crafts union, traditional policy of the American Federation of Labor. To further the industrial union theory, which would organize the mass production employes of the country, thus taking advantage of the 39,000,000 unorganized workers in the Nation, the United Mine Workers and seven other organizations favoring industrial unionism within the A. F. of L., organized the committee for industrial organization.

Sticking to its craft-union policy, the A. F. of L., at its September con-

D. C. Red Rider Laid to Clique By House Pair

Reps. Sisson and Amlie Hold Army-Navy-Tory Faction to Blame.

An "Army-Navy-Tory" clique was charged last night with having "put across, the anti-Communism rider in the District appropriation bill, which resulted in the banning of all mention of communism in the public schools, by Representative Fred J. Sisson, of New York. Speaking at a meeting of the Independent Legislative Bureau at the Cosmos Club, Representative Sisson and Representative Thomas Amlie, of Wisconsin, assailed the communism rider as contrary to the wishes of the American people.

"Through the efforts of the Army-Navy-Tory groups in the District, assininities which we believed had been relegated to the last century have again been foisted upon the people of a free republic," said Representative Amlie. "I can see no reason why any member of Congress should permit the Army-Navy-Tory gang, with their powerful lobby, to make a laughing stock of the House and Senate."

Further charges that this group had forced through the anit-red rider were made by Sisson, who pointed out that the rider follows immediately after a proviso that children of the officers of the Army and Navy shall be educated free of charge in the District.

Sisson Assails Blanton.

"It is a fair and almost inescapable inference that the alarmed and excited Mr. Blanton was further alarmed and excited by some of the repressionists and restrictionists who represent the Army and Navy lobby here and who are constantly sticking their noses into legislation," said Sisson. His reference to Representative Blanton, Texas, came on the heels of his charge that Blanton had forced the anti-red rider through when most members of Congress were unaware of its existence or meaning.

"While I think it proper and necessary that the generals and admirals be called upon for advice in technical matters involving our military and naval defense," said Sisson, "I have always objected to their attempted usurpation of the province of the State Department in matters involving our foreign and international policy.

"This is their first incursion in the field of academic freedom and public school education. I resent, and shall oppose, one as much as the other. However, their entire ignorance of the psychology of our young people," said Sisson, a former school superintendent, "is so dense that in this instance they are defeating their own purpose. Instead of lessening the interest of our young people in communistic ideas, they are increasing it many-fold.

"No person believes anyone should teach communism in the schools. It is an insult, however, to the teach-

House Unit Votes Soil Subsidy Bill

Roosevelt Message Held a Step to Forestall Other Suits.

By Felix Bruner.

Farm leaders in Congress prepared yesterday to act promptly on President Roosevelt's request for repeal of three major agriculture relief laws. The measures are the Bankhead cotton control, the Kerr-Smith tobacco and the potato control acts.

The President asked for repeal of the three laws in a brief message in which he explained that his recommendation was made "because of the termination of the program of agricultural production adjustment under the act of May 12, 1933, as amended, known as the 'agricultural adjustment act,' to which the three acts mentioned were auxiliary."

Meanwhile, the House Agriculture Committee reported out the soil conservation subsidy bill, designed as a substitute for the AAA measure, by a vote of 19 to 6. As reported from the committee it was only slightly different from the Bankhead bill. The latter measure was expected to be considered by the Senate yesterday, but consideration was postponed because of illness of Senator Bankhead. If he is able to be present today, the measure will be taken up as the first order of business.

Sugar Contract Not Mentioned.

Since the Supreme Court decision holding the AAA act invalid, it has generally been conceded that the three laws mentioned by the President could not stand. No mention of the sugar contral act was made in the message. It was explained that this measure is on a different basis than the others, designed largely to provide quota limitations on imports to offset tariff reductions on Cuban raw sugar.

Senator Russell (Democrat), Georgia, introduced a bill repealing the Bankhead law. A bill repealing all three measures was introduced in the House by Representative Jones (Democrat), Texas, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee.

Repeal of the cotton act was approved by its author, Senator Bankhead (Democrat), Alabama, who said that the act had served its purpose. The Georgia delegation in Congress already had suggested that the ginning tax on cotton, provided by the Bankhead law, be suspended.

Talmadge Has Suit.

President Roosevelt's message was seen as forestalling Supreme Court action which was believed certain eventually to hold all three of the measures unconstitutional. Incidentally, repeal of the Bankhead act will knock the props from under one of the fights being waged by Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia against the New Deal. Talmadge has a suit attacking the measure pending in the Supreme Court.

The Associated Press reported from Atlanta that Talmadge had said that the President's action "comes a little late, but I am glad to hear about it."

"I wish to congratulate the President," he added.

Senator Bankhead, who previously had discussed with Mr. Roosevelt the desirability of repeal of the cotton law, said:

"The Bankhead act has served a purpose in the cotton belt, far more favorably than any purely co-operative program. Under the Supreme Court rulings in other cases, I don't see any value in keeping the tax acts for cotton, tobacco and potatoes on the statute books."

Borah in Favor.

Senator Borah (Republican), Idaho, said repeal of the three farm laws was "entirely proper." Senator George declared that repeal of the laws would end confusion among farmers and in the industry generally.

Repeal of the potato control act will end one of the sharpest controversies involving agricultural legislation. This act, placing rigid restrictions on the production and sale of potatoes, was passed at the last session of Congress without active Administration approval. Money for its enforcement was contained in the deficiency bill, which was filibustered to death in the closing hours of the session. Enforcement was delayed while new funds were sought, not too enthusiastically. An appropriation

Neutrality Bill Conceded Dead In This Session

Possibility of enactment of the Administration's neutrality bill in the present session of Congress appeared remote yesterday.

Strong opposition to the bill from several quarters and the shortness of time before expiration of the present law combined to make passage of the Administration bill particularly difficult.

Chairman McReynolds (Democrat), Tennessee, of the House Foreign Affairs Committee said last night that he was uncertain whether he would ask today for a rule to permit immediate consideration of the bill. The measure was reported by the House Committee last week.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, meanwhile, planned to conclude executive hearings on the measure Wednesday and to take up the question of whether public hearings should be held. Chairman Pittman (Democrat), Nevada, said it would be 10 days before a bill could be reported.

Meanwhile, the Senate Munitions Committee will reopen its hearings today with partners of J. P. Morgan & Co. on the witness stand. Morgan himself has been notified that it will not be necessary for him to appear.

Pittman said that if it becomes apparent that a new bill cannot be enacted before February 29, the date of expiration of the present law, he will advocate passage of the pending resolution extending the old law for another year. He emphasized, however, that this would not preclude consideration and passage of a new law before adjournment, and that the new law would supercede the old one immediately upon enactment.

Prolonged Debate Seen.

With ten days elapsing before the measure is reported to the Senate, only a little more than two weeks would remain before February 29 for its consideration. It was generally conceded that it would be all but impossible to pass the law in that length of time. Prolonged debate is certain.

The plan most likely to be followed, a plan suggested by Senator Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, would be extension of the present law with an amendment to empower the President to limit extension of credits to belligerents.

Such a move would permit sidestepping for the present the highly controversial provisions covering freedom of the seas. This section, which provides that shippers sending goods to belligerents must ship at their own risk, has resulted in the most heated opposition to the proposed "permanent" neutrality policy.

Publication yesterday of the attack on the Administration bill made in an executive meeting of the Senate committee by John Bassett Moore, former member of the World Court, added strength to the opposition. Moore called the Administration bill "a curious blend of homicidal and suicidal mania." The Moore statement was made public by Senator Johnson (Republican), California, one of the most active opponents of the neutrality bill.

Pittman said, in commenting on opposition to the bill, that he was satisfied that there will be some legislation in addition to the present law.

Referring to the release by Johnson of the Moore statement, Pittman said that he had no official knowledge that it had been published. He referred to the understanding that the committee hearings should not be made public.

"I shall take up with the committee the question of whether it is not advisable to publish the entire proceedings, both the criticism of the legislation and its defense, Senator Pope (Democrat), Idaho, said that he intended taking up with the committee "this matter of making public testimony given in executive session."

Senator Johnson merely asserted, in discussing publication of the Moore statement, that he was judge of his own actions.

Pittman said that, while he had not polled the committee, he believed Johnson was the only member who seriously opposed the bill. He said he based his opinion on questions asked in the hearings.

$125,000 In Expenditures.

The Nye committee will reopen its hearings following receipt of an additional appropraition of $7,393 from the Senate. The committee already has spent $125,000 in specific appropriations and $58,000 in relief money.

Witnesses before the committee today will include Thomas W. Lamont and Russell C. Leffingwell, Morgan partners, and Albert Rathbone, New York banker and lawyer. Both Leffingwell and Rathbone were Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury during the World War period. Treasury documents and correspondence concerning floatation of allied loans are expected to be put into the record.

Nye indicated that he had no further questions to ask Morgan.

The three witnesses called for today are expected to be on the stand for about two days. Nye has a long list of other witnesses only some of whom are expected to be called. They also will be questioned concerning World War activities. The hearings are expected to be concluded in ten days or less. The final report of the committee has been promised for about March 1.

Rankin Drafting Power Plant Bill

Following up a promise he made earlier in the session, Representative Rankin (Democrat), Mississippi, is drafting a bill to erect a Government-owned hydroelectric power plant at Great Falls.

The measure, which may be introduced this week, is similar to a bill which passed the Senate several years ago under the sponsorship of Senator Norris (Republican), Nebraska, but defeated in the House.

Rankin said he thought the Government should set an example in Government power plant operation in the National Capital. He hopes to persuade Senator Norris to introduce a companion bill in the Senate.

Politics and People

Mine Workers' Break With Tradition of Labor Seen as Move Toward Another Party.

By Franklyn Waltman

NOTHING so full of potentialities has happened on the American political scene in recent weeks as the action of the United Mine Workers of America in voting to support President Roosevelt in the coming election and to contribute out of the union's $2,000,000 war chest for that purpose.

This action marked the first time in the history of the country that a large segment of organized labor—probably the most important wing of organized labor—has definitely and unequivocally cast its lot with the success of the Presidential candidate of one of the major parties.

In 1924 the executive council of the American Federation of Labor indorsed the third party Presidential candidacy of Robert M. La Follette—and without any substantial effect. But there are no other precedents for the action of the mine workers. Indeed the traditional policy of the A. F. of L. has been to remain free and aloof from partisanship. But the mine workers have revolted against the parent organization not alone on that policy but on the question of internal organization.

Some observers see in the break of the mine workers with the traditionalism of organized labor a definite move toward an American labor party. This, of course, is a long range view. It is not possible for the United Mine Workers to make the Democratic Party a labor party this year, but the amalgamation of the two groups in a political endeavor might well become the foundation for such a development in the near future.

Indorsement of President Roosevelt by the chieftains of the mine workers, standing alone, would not be the important and significant event that it is in any long range view. It is well known that with few exceptions labor organizations have been ineffective in politics. Time and again it has beeen demonstrated that the rank and file of organized labor will not vote as a unit except in a fight against a candidate who has been notoriously unfair to labor.

But in the present instance there is a labor organization which owes more to the Roosevelt Administration than perhaps any other group in the country. The collective bargaining section of NRA made it possible for the dynamic John L. Lewis to build the organization to its present strength of 500,000 men.

Even though he apparently doubted the Constitutionality of the Guffey coal conservation act, Mr. Roosevelt forced that measure through Congress in an effort to save an industry crumbling from the impact of inevitable economic forces. No man could have done more for that group and it is only natural that these workers should show their gratitude, but it was not expected they would adopt the extraordinary course of aligning themselves as an organization, money and all, with Mr. Roosevelt.

There is another aspect to this situation. Not only does the President preach a political philosophy which best serves the interests of this particular labor group, but he has undertaken repeatedly in recent months to draw class distinctions—labor, the farmer and the man in the street on one side; the banker, industrialist, businessman—employers all—on the other.

The more the President denounces the leaders of business and industry as spokesmen for "intrenched greed," the greater will be the exodus of these groups from within the Democratic Party. Thus the lines, it would appear, are slowly being laid for a political contest between conservatives and left-wingers. Such a clear-cut distinction cannot be expected in this year's campaign, but should Mr. Roosevelt triumph the progress toward such an alignment undoubtedly would be accelerated, for good or bad.

Political trends already have developed in this direction so far that several keen-minded figures on Capitol Hills have accepted without question the accuracy of a report that John Lewis, if he desired, could this year be Mr. Roosevelt's running mate for the Vice Presidency. The situation has not yet reached the point where such an extraordinary alignment between labor and a political party seems practical. But Mr. Lewis, in addition to being the ablest of the labor leaders, is a very ambitious man—and he is sufficiently young to bide his time.

Undoubtedly, Gov. Eugene Talmadge will take full credit for President Roosevelt's message to Congress asking repeal of the Bankhead cotton, the Kerr-Smith tobacco and the Warren potato control acts. The Georgian at the Macon grass roots convention paused in the middle of his speech to say he was "now going to talk directly to the President," pointing to the radio. After an admirer in the audience shouted "You tell him, Gene," the Governor suggested that Mr. Roosevelt "call up Henry Wallace and tell him to forgit all about this Bankhead act."

Of course, the Talmadge advice did not move the President. Mr. Roosevelt clearly saw from the Supreme Court's AAA decision that these control acts soon or late would be declared invalid and he apparently wanted to be ahead of the court. Incidentally, he deprived Gov. Talmadge of the prospect of winning the suit he brought challenging the Bankhead act.

Apropos of the Supreme Court's decision to hear a case involving validity of the SEC, a story being widely told around Washington concerns a meeting between one of the justices of the high tribunal and a lawyer he taught in law school. The jurist had not seen his former pupil for several years and he inquired what he was doing in Washington.

"I came down here about a year and a half ago with NRA," the lawyer replied according to the story. "Just before you invalidated the NRA I went over to AAA and a little more than a month ago I was transferred to the SEC."

"Well, the justice is said to have observed, "you certainly have been successful in keeping one lap ahead of us."

Monopoly Ban Urged in Talk By O'Mahoney

Senator Presses for Bill Asking Tax on Foreign Trade Firms.

By the Associated Press.

To check "the destructive influence" of monopoly, Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), Wyoming, called last night for enactment of his bill requiring Federal licensing for corporations doing an interstate business.

"Every State has a corportion law," he said, in a radio address. "Most of them are wise and saultary, but some few States have laws of so loose a character as to permit the most unconscionable violation of honest dealing.

Would Halt Rich Blocs.

"Under such laws, monopoly has prospered, while the masses of the people have been steadily sinking into poverty. We spend our time setting up new Government agencies, proposing new pensions and bouses, mokeying with the currency and trying to find all manner of panacea instead of going to the very heart of the problem, which is merely to stop the cocentration of wealth."

His bill, he said, would require that "when a corporation undertakes to carry on commerce with foreign nations or among States, it do so under a Federal, rather than a State charter."

Saying that "appalling poverty at one end of the scale, appaling wealth at the other," characterized America before 1929, he added.

"Great as is the national debt, costly as all governments, municipal, State and national, may be, that debt is but a drop in the bucket when measured against the tribute that has been wrung from the people of America under the present corporate system."

The Senator asserted that monopoly has been allowed "to grow apace by permitting State corporations to dominate our national economy" through "merger and overcapitalization."

Concentration of Wealth.

He then proposed that as a prerequisite for receipt of a Federal charter, a company should show its officers were stockholders and not affiliated with any company in a similar business or with any creditor company.

The right of labor to bargain collectively, a prohibition of child labor and a prohibition on discriminating against female employes are set forth in the bill which O'Mahoney outlined.

He asserted that in 1932, 618 corporations controled 53 per cent of the $280,000,000,000 assets reported to the Internal Revenue Bureau by 390,000 corporations.

U. S. Inquiry Urged Into 'Bottle Trust'

By the Associated Press.

Charging that a whisky and bottle trust control the Nation's liquor business, Representative Fuller (Democrat), Arkansas, yesterday introduced a resolution calling for an investigation of the industry.

He proposed to set up a five-man House committee appointed by the Speaker to make the inquiry.

"There is no doubt about a 'whisky trust' and a 'bottle trust,'" Fuller said in a statement.

He redicted their continuation would "bring a national scandal."

Fuller said the Owen Illinois Glass Co. produces about 85 per cent of the whisky bottles, while 80 per cent of the liquor manufactured in the United States is produced by nine distillers.

Tugwell Sees Wider Housing As Possibility

Refusal by Industry to Meet the Problem May Require U. S. Need.

Cincinnati, Feb. 3.—Resettlement Administrator Rexford G. Tugwell tonight said the persistent refusal of private industry to meet the problem of lower housing costs, "may force the Government to enter this field on a very wide scale."

Tugwell spoke at a dinner of the Ohio Regional Planning Board. The administrator confined his remarks entirely to a discussion of suburban housing. One of the Administration's four major suburban housing projects will be located near Cincinnati.

"The Government has waited patiently for private industry to manifest some real interest in the creation of low-cost homes," Tugwell said. "Up to now, almost no progress has been made in this field. I am told by people who know about materials and about new processes in industry that it is possible to make a house which can be sold for a price which is within the means of those whose incomes are less than $1,200 a year."

In 1933, Tugwell recalled, more than half of the city dwellers had family incomes of less than $1,000. Today, he estimated, the figure is about $1,200.

"If we are to have an unsubsidized industry which will be effective in high standard rehousing," Tugwell continued, "either wages have got to go up or costs have got to come down. * * *

"If private industry persists in its refusal to exploit the possibilities which are clearly there, the pressure of public opinion may force the Government to enter this field on a very wide scale."

Films Show Youth Ascended Rainier

Seattle, Feb. 3 (AP).—Camera pictures told today what Delmar Fadden did not live to tell—that he made the first January ascent of Mount Rainier before freezing to death on the descent.

Three prints from film rolls found when the body of the 23-year-old "thrill climber" was recovered at the 13,000-foot level last Friday were viewed by Ome Daiber, mountaineer who led the searching party.

"He made it!" Daiber exclaimed. "That's a picture of the crater. The two others were taken from high on the mountain, one probably near the level where he died."

The youth's parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. D Fadden made plans for public funeral services Wednesday afternoon at Plymouth Congregational Church.

Bar Is Voted on Aliens 'Commuting' to U. S.

By the Associated Press.

The House yesterday passed a bill designed to restrict the habitual commuting of aliens from contiguous foreign territory to engage in skilled or unskilled labor or employment in Continental United States. The bill now goes to the Senate.

Persons who live outside United States jurisdiction would be prohibited from crossing the international border, daily or otherwise, for regular employment within the United States. The measure provides that these aliens shall be considered as "immigrants" under the immigration laws and shall be excluded from the United States unless they have either an unexpired immigration visa or an unexpired re-entry permit.

Young G. O. P. Votes for Link To Old-Timers

Bradley Elected Chairman; Fletcher Protest Read at Meeting.

By the United Press.

The Young Republican National Federation yesterday allied itself with the Republican national committee despite protests of an independent minority.

J. Kenneth Bradley, director of the national committee's young Republican division, was elected national chairman of the national federation. Wallace Stearns, representing Federation Region No. 1, comprising the New England States, and George Sibley, representing New York, New Jersey and Delaware—Region No. 2—led the opposition to Bradley.

Bradley Defeats Carton.

Bradley defeated John Carton, Lansing, Mich., by an executive committee vote of 13 to 5.

"There is nothing to talk about the Young Republican movement becoming subservient to the national committee," Bradley said after the polling.

Yesterday's election ended several months of maneuvering between a Young Republican group operating independently of the national committee and representatives of the regular Republican organization. Representatives of New England, except Connecticut, and of New York, New Jersey, Delaware and Michigan, voted against Bradley. Edward S. Shattuck, with half a vote from the Tenth Region—California, Arizona, Nevada and Utah—refused to cast a ballot for either candidate, as did Henry Somsen, representing Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin and the Dakotas.

The executive committee will resume its deliberations today to adopt organization procedure. Anti-Bradley leaders said they would continue to participate in the proceedings. Both sides emphasized their party loyalty, but the anti-Bradley leaders expressed resentment at what they described as "railroading the meeting" in favor of a national committee employe.

George Olmsted, of Iowa, retiring national chairman, refused to stand for re-election. He and Chairman Henry P. Fetcher, of the Republican national committee, have exchanged correspondence for several months in an effort to work out a plan of co-operation between the Young Republican movement and the regular party organization.

Oranization Ignored.

The anti-Bradley faction protests that Fletcher has "ignored" the existence of the Young Republican organization. In a privately circulated report on the organization's activities, it is stated that the Young Republican division established by Fletcher was set up without consultation with Olmsted and other Young Republican leaders. That division was created September 26. The Young Republican report continues:

"One week later, Chairman Henry P. Fletcher, of the Republican national committee, again ignoring the existence of the National Young Republican organization, announced the appointment of J. Kenneth Bradley, of Connecticut, as director of the Young Republican division.

The report complains further that the national committee refused to extend official recognition to the Young Republican national meeting in Des Moines last November.

Fletcher told the executive committee in a speech of welcome that the G. O. P. was dependent on them for "the enthusiasm, the sincerity of purpose and the high ideals which the party must keep if it is to live and do its duty to the Nation."

Report Says Smith Will Be Delegate

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 3.—The Herald Tribune says Alfred E. Smith will go to the Democratic national convention as relegate from his old home district, embracing lower Manhattan and Staten Island.

The paper says that in deciding to go the former Governor of New York and Democratic Presidential candidate accepted a challenge of Roosevelt Administration supporters who proposed, as a result of Smith's Liberty League address, to prevent him from going to the convention as a delegate.

Edward J. Flynn, Democratic leader of the Bronx and a Roosevelt supporter, announced today that he will be a convention delegate from that district.

Farm Laws Repeal Sought

for enforcement was stricken from the pending deficiency bill several days ago.

Movement for repeal of the farm laws and approval by the House Committee of the soil conservation act came in the midst of various other activities involving agriculture.

Among other developments were:

Passage by the Senate of the Smith bill authorizing $60,000,000 for seed and feed loans. This measure was passed after only very brief debate. The House later passed the bill but cut the amount to $40,000,000.

The Senate passed the deficiency bill, totaling $367,000,000, which included $296,185,000 for benefits to farmers under existing crop reduction contracts. Processing taxes for this purpose were ruled out by the Supreme Court, but Administration leaders held there was a "moral obligation" to pay under the contracts. An amendment was added by the Senate to permit payment of cotton benefits still due, regardless of whether the Bankhead act is repealed. The bill, which has been passed by the House, will go to conference.

Senator Benson (Farmer-Labor), Minnesota, introduced a bill to permit farmers and consumers to sue in Federal courts for recovery of $200,000,000 in processing taxes, impounded by the courts, and which the Supreme Court has ordered returned to the processors. Benson said processors had admitted passing these taxes on to farmers and consumers. Secretary Wallace recently referred to the proposed return of the taxes to processors as "the greatest steal in history."

Norbeck Offers Bill.

Chairman Smith (Democrat), South Carolina, of the Senate Agriculture Committee, introduced a bill to create a three-man board to take over 6,000,000 bales of Government-controlled cotton and to sell from 20,000 to 25,000 bales weekly. Profits would go to the original growers.

Senator Norbeck (Republican), South Dakota, proposed an amendment to the Bankhead soil conservation bill providing that the Government should purchase and retire from production 40,000,000 acres of corn, wheat, cotton, rice and tobacco land. He also proposed that 10,000,000 acres of grazing and timber land be similarly retired. He estimated the program would cost $125,000,000 a year. The Secretary of Agriculture would be empowered to rent the lands for limited production, the produce resulting to be kept in reserve.

Every effort is being made to speed enactment of the soil conservation bill. Preparations already are being made in the South for the new cotton crop and there are indications that, with restrictions removed, planters are preparing a much larger acreage than they planted last year. Secretary Wallace hopes the new law can be made effective in time to prevent greatly increased crops.

The new act provides for voluntary retirement of land from production with benefit payments for such retirement. It further provides that beginning in 1938 the Government shall make grants to States for production control.

A House Agriculture Committee amendment to the farm bill would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to use part of the funds to be appropriated for expansion of domestic and foreign markets and for the disposal of surpluses.

Program Limited.

The committee also placed a limitation on the purposes of the temporary two-year soil conservation program. Under the House bill the conservation program would be limited to soil rebuilding and promotion of the economic use of lands. The other two objectives originally included in this section of the bill were switched to the permanent State-aid provision. They are effective January 1, 1938. Maintenance of a stable flow of commodities at prices fair to both producers and consumers, and re-establishment and maintenance of farm purchasing power.

These latter two provisions were the heart of the AAA law. In spite of the change from the temporary to the permanent section of the present bill, they obviously are the major purposes of proposed farm legislation. Under the guise of soil rebuilding and the economic use of lands, the Government hopes to limit production sufficiently to maintain prices. The change was believed to have been made to forestall constitutional questions.

A provision also was written into the House bill making funds available for dairy cattle tuberculosis eradication and control of Bang's disease.

Under the bill, county, State and local committees, as well as AAA personnel may be used in administering both the temporary and permanent sections.

Comments on Request.

Chicago, Feb. 3 (AP).—Representatives of farmers' organizations made the following comments last night on President Roosevelt's message recommending repeal of the Bankhead cotton control, Kerr-Smith tobacco and the potato act of 1935:

Hugh Tabb, executive secretary of the National Potato Association: "We have been at work on substitute legislation. We feel a little discouraged, but I guess we shouldn't. It took the Supreme Court to stop us.

"We are waiting to see if the general farm legislation is broad enough to cover the potato situation. If it isn't, there may be some auxiliary legislation for intensive crops."

Milo Reno, of Des Moines, Iowa, president of the National Farm Holiday Association:

"It's a wise move on Roosevelt's part. And he would be even wiser if he would get his whole farm program repealed and start over again, the next time building right."

Stanley F. Morse, executive vice president of the Farmers Independent Council of America:

"The Administration now recognizes the complete collapse of the Government farm program and should be ready to permit the farmers to do their own planning and to develop a sound program based on farmer self-help and control—not on bureaucratic dictatorship."

C. C. Cogswell, master of the Kansas Grange:

"I hope it means the President has a constructive farm program in mind. I like the farm bill introduced last week by Representative Hope (Republican), Kansas."

Capital Stock Issues In Virginia Increase

The Internal Revenue Bureau reported today that Federal taxes on bonds of indebtedness, capital stock issues and deeds, collected in Virginia during 1935, totaled $99,131, as compared with $88,011 in 1934, according to the Associated Press.

The bureau's collections on capital stock transfers in 1935 totaled $9,238, as compared with $8,522 in the previous year.

Federal Agents Seize Fugitive Letter Forger

Rakes, Known as 'Trigger Man,' Surrenders at Danville, Va.

The far-reaching arm of the Department of Justice caught up yesterday with Hobart Rakes, climaxing a 19-month search for the liquor runner and former coal miner who almost gained his freedom from Atlanta penitentiary several years ago by forging the name of a United States attorney.

J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, announced Rakes was captured early yesterday at Danville, Va., by special agents and two Virginia highway patrolmen. Known as a dangerous "trigger man," Rakes offered no resistance and was taken to Roanoke.

He will be transferred to Bluefield, W. Va., to face charges of violating the national motor vehicle theft act. He also is under indictment for forging the name of James Damron, former United States attorney at Huntington, W. Va.

A native Virginian, born in 1897, Rakes first received a Federal sentence in March, 1929, when the United States District Court for the Southern District of West Virginia gave him a four-year term for conspiring to violate the internal revenue act. Sent to Atlanta, he was released on parole in October, 1930.

In September, 1931, he was returned to prison for violating conditions of his parole. Ten months later correspondence between the parole officer at Atlanta penitentiary and West Virginia authorities disclosed Rakes' scheme to forge his way to freedom.

The correspondence indicated, said the Department of Justice, "that Mr. Damron had addressed a letter to Rakes in which it was indicated that Rakes was innocent of the charge which led to the parole violator warrant being issued."

"The purported letter from Mr. Damron stated that his letter could be used to secure Rakes' release. James Damron, who at the time the letter from Parole Officer Maynard was received had retired to private practice, stated that he had not written a letter indicating Rakes' innocence."

Hoover yesterday declared:

"Investigation indicated that the complete forgery, covering the printing of the letterhead, typing and signature, was made at the Unnted States Penitentiary at Atlanta. Laboratory investigation also indicated that the penitentiary mail receiving stamp on the forged letter was not genuine."

The ruse was frustrated and Rakes served out his term, being released January 25, 1934, without a complaint on the forgery charge being lodged against him. He was at large when a grand jury indicted him in July, 1934, for forging Damron's name.

Hoover's men redoubled efforts to recapture Rakes last February, when a complaint was filed against him and John Arthur Kitts charging them with transporting a stolen auto over a State line, from Wolfe, W. Va., ot Rocky Gap, Va.

Announcing the success yesterday, Hoover declined to give the names of the agents who made the capture, in keeping with bureau policy.

Note Adds Mystery In Student's Death

Northampton, Mass., Feb. 3 (AP).—A cryptic notation in an opened German text book puzzled police tonight, as they investigated the mysterious death of Francis O. Grose, Amherst freshman.

The battered body of the young son of a wealthy Great Neck N. Y., family, was found today on the ice of the Connecticut River, under a railroad trestle, between Northampton and Hadley. It was discovered nine hours after he disappeared from the college, 8 miles away.

Chief of Police Bartholomew Bresnahan said he found scribbled in pencil on an opened page of the textbook in the boy's room, the words: "The disaster hove in sight."

The scrawl, the chief said, was "not enough evidence to indicate suicide, but at the same time there is not enough evidence from the wounds to indicate foul play."

Grose's skull was fractured, a dozen ribs broken, a lung punctured, both kidneys ruptured, and head and ankles marked by lacerations.

Widow of Barnett, Indian, Fights U.S.

San Francisco, Feb. 3 (AP).—The Government's right to nullify a white woman's marriage to a millionaire Indian was contested today by Mrs. Anna Laura Howe Barnett.

Claiming she is the legal widow of the late Jackson Barnett, she submitted her case to the Ninth United States Circuit Court of Appeals after being denied a request to personally address the court.

The Government contends that Barnett—who received millions in oil royalties from wells on his land—was incompetent and that she kidnaped him, took him to Coffeyville, Kans., and married him.

Battling for a widow's share of the estate, she asked permission of Justice Curtis Wilbur to speak for herself, but was informed the court never heard statements from parties represented by counsel. Her attorney, Paul R. Hutchinson, argued that no court had the power to set aside a marriage after one of the parties died.

Sit-Down Strike Fails At Goodyear Plant

Akron, Ohio, Feb. 3 (AP).—A company ultimatum to work or leave the premises terminated late today a "sit-down" protest of two hours staged by the second shift of 100 curing-pit workers at the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

The men named a committee to confer with company representatives concerning a piecework rate reduction and announced they would not work until the conference ended.

Fred Climer, personnel manager, told them about two hours later he would give them 15 minutes to decide whether to work or get out. They resumed operations.

Says Governor and 'Gang' Permitted Slaying of Publisher.

By the Associated Press.

Minneapolis, Feb. 3.—Mrs. Walter Liggett climaxed a highly dramatic session of Isadore Blumenfeld's trial for her husband's assassination today with the assertion that Gov. Floyd B. Olson—and his "gang"—"permitted" the slaying.

Soon after, nervous from the strain of her long testimony, she collapsed and court recessed for three hours.

At Rochester, where he is recuperating from an operation, the Governor said he had no statement to make. "They are trying the case up there in Minneapolis," was his only comment.

The Governor was responsible for appointment of special prosecutors to aid the case against Blumenthal, also known as "Kid Cann."

Mother Heard Charge.

"The murder would not have been committed without Gov. Olson's permission," the slight woman, garbed in black, told a crowded courtroom. She explained her statement as "meaning they either ordered or permitted it."

"I called my mother after Walter was shot," Mrs. Liggett testified, "and said 'Gov. Olson's gang got Walter, mother.'

"She asked 'Do you know who did it?' and I said, 'yes, Kid Cann.'"

Before the recess, Mrs. Liggett had been calm under cross-examination. But after the respite in testimony was ordered, at State's request, she broke down in the county attorney's office and sobbed hysterically.

Regarded as the prosecution's most important witness, Mrs. Liggett in the morning session reiterated her identification of Blumenfeld as her husband's slayer. She also testified that the night the crusading publisher was slain, December 9, an edition of his publication, the Mid-West American, was in the mails, carrying an attack on Blumenfeld, a liquor syndicate salesman, and listing 12 "reasons" why Gov. Olson should be impeached.

Phone Call Overheard.

She also suggested to police, she testified, that they pick up Meyer Schuldberg when they took the "Kid" into custody.

Schuldberg is president of Chesapeake Brands, Inc., liquor concern for which Blumenfeld is a salesman.

Mrs. Liggett said she overheard a telephone conversation between Liggett and Schuldberg the day the publisher was slain explaining the liquor concern head was "in a rage and shouting" and offered "to bet $500 I haven't got a cutting plant."

"He also said 'there are other ways to stop you,'" she testified, in disclosing Schuldberg demanded to know "why Walter was calling him a rat and classing him with a person like Kid Cann."

Schuldberg was questioned but released at the time. In another telephone conversation Liggett was warned from an underworld source he was "running a terrible risk," the witness said.

and you know how you feel when the cupboard is getting empty.

"We'll be all right out there. When the big blimp came bobbing down out of the sky with supplies Sunday we all were mighty glad."

"Health is good on the island," Crockett asserted.

"The food is short, and if help hadn't come, there would have been suffering in a few days. We didn't have any butter or meat, or flour or sugar. There isn't any panic among us. We got a doctor and medical supplies."

Several proposed flights to the island were canceled yesterday when a blinding snow and sleet set in. Among these was the proposed hop of J. Millard Tawes, chairman of the Crisfield Chapter of the American Red Cross.

At Red Cross headquarters and elsewhere the feeling of tension about the plight of the islanders relaxed.

In case of emergency, Red Cross officials pointed out, they may depend on the friendly big blimp, Enterprise, which delivered more than 1,000 pounds of food on the island Sunday. The blimp was enjoying a well-earned vacation in her hangar yesterday, and no immediate plans had been made to take her out.

Only three cases of pneumonia have been reported on Tangier, and a chartered plane Sunday took an oxygen tank to aid the stricken.

As snow blocked the air lanes to Tangier and Smith Islands last night, Gov. Harry W. Nice, of Maryland, ordered six State troopers to Crisfield to stand by to aid the islanders in whatever way they could.

Into Crisfield, as the shadows of evening fell yesterday, came fishermen from the islands and from up and down the bay, whose craft have been frozen in, and who are unable to communicate with their families.

By last night their number was estimated at 100. About 25 of these were without any money. All of them were anxious about their families on the islands and elsewhere.

The Crisfield Red Cross arranged with the Maryland National Guard for the men to occupy the armory.

Last night Crisfield remotely resembled an Alaska mining village as sleet fell on the already snowy streets and the lonely men gathered around fires and talked of home—out there across the foggy wastes of ice that covered the Chesapeake.

No Trace Is Found Of Undersea S O S

Colon, Panama, Feb. 3 (AP).—An S O S which some officials thought came from a submarine, was received by the wireless station at Coco Solo, Canal Zone, today.

All submarines stationed at local bases were found to be safe, however, and authorities, not knowing the position of the ship which apparently was in distress, said they could take no action.

The Coast Guard at Miami reported that the S O S received at Coco Solo was signed "S-55."

At Washington the Navy Department announced the United States Navy has no such ship as S-55.

Miami Coast Guard officers said the signal might have come from either a submarine or some form of aircraft, but probably not from a surface ship.

There have been reports recently from South America that unidentified submarines were operating October 31 off the Galapagos Islands, 730 miles west of Ecuador, in the Pacific Ocean.

Jury Sets Bond For 10 Alleged N.Y. Vice Kings

Bonds Total $435,000 in Raid; Reputed Leader to Be Arraigned.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 3.—As swiftly as he moved in raids over the weekend, Special Prosecutor Thomas E. Dewey presented to his blue-ribbon grand jury tonight the cases of 11 alleged ringleaders in the city's $15,000,000 vice racket.

Peter Balitzer, alias Pete Harris, arrested in Philadelphia Saturday and held there pending extradition, was indicted on a charge of compulsory prostitution. He was alleged to have made $1,000,000 a year.

The racket prosecutor's determination to arrest, arraign and indict his prisoners in double-quick time resulted in the grand jury's convening at unprecedented hours, from 4 p. m. to 11 p. m.

Meanwhile, a police department housecleaning appeared likely when Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine sent a confidential squad to inspect the 41 disorderly houses raided in the week-end drive.

Members of Dewey's forces said that David Betillo and Thomas Pennacchio, among those arrested Saturday, were co-directors of the "Mott street mob." Mott street lies only a short distance from police headquarters.

Earlier tonight the ten alleged vice lords in custody here had been arraigned and held in total bail of $435,000 for hearings Thursday. Balitzer is to be arraigned Thursday.

Dewey's announced intention of making a "general investigation into everything" brought the arrest of 88 men and women in a series of 44 swift raids Saturday night and Sunday morning.

The young prosecutor, who embarked last July 29 on a two-year drive to clean up New York County, placed the vice syndicate's earnings, collected from women in a chain of 200 houses, at upward of $15,000,000 a year.

Balitzer's chief lieutenant, Dewey said, was Joseph (Jo-Jo) Weintraub.

Others of the 11 Dewey named high up in the council of vice included Eddie Balitzer, brother of Peter; Jack Ellenstein, accused of having taken ever the racket operated by Nick Montana, now in prison serving a 25-year-term for compulsory prostitution, and Al Weiner, son of Louis (Cock-eyed Louie) Weiner, also in prison.

Dewey expressed an opinion Montana and the elder Weiner were only underlings in the system.

The vice racket in New York City, he said, was smashed by the raids.

Vice Ring Shocks Britain.

London, Feb. 3 (U.P.).—Existence of a white slave and dope peddling racket in Great Britain—on a scale which shocked even Scotland Yard's hard-boiled sleuths—was disclosed tonight as a sequel to a recent gang killing.

The "ride" victim, whose bullet-riddled body was found beneath a hedge 20 miles north of London, on the night of January 24, was identified as Max Kassel, Polish Jew, alias Max the Red, alias Ginger Max, flashily dressed as a big shot of a white slave and dope gang, with ramifications in Europe, Africa and North and South Americas.

Police in London and Paris discovered that Max, 56-year-old, 220-pound thug, was a master criminal and leader of a mob which specialized in bringing foreign women to Britain through "fixed" marriages of convenience with Englishmen for small financial consideration.

Group Did Not Boost Sugar Price, Court Told

By the Associated Press.

Arguing for the right of a trade association to regulate industrial practices to prevent abuses, counsel for the Sugar Institute, Inc., told the Supreme Court yesterday that the organization of sugar refiners had not produced any increase in prices to consumers.

In one of the most important anti-trust cases of recent years, Government attorneys were ready to contend today that the activities of the institute violated the Sherman act prohibiting combinations in restraint of trade.

7 Men on Dam Project Killed; 18 Hurt in Dormitory Blaze

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Feb. 3.—Seven of 90 workmen sleeping in a dormitory at the Parker Dam Construction camp perished today in fire that trapped them in their bunks.

Two other workmen suffered critical burns and 16 more were given hospital treatment.

The bodies were placed in a temporary morgue. Four were identified as Harold Herman, Joe Peterson, Otton Doran and Albert Johnson. All doctors and nurses in Needles, Calif., a railway division point were summoned there.

The dormitory and a mess hall, also destroyed, were operated by Anderson Bros., sub-contractors for the Six Companies, builders of the dam, it was said by Los Angeles officials of the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California. The water district let the contract for the dam construction.

A night watchman discovered the blaze at 3.30 a. m. in the recreation hall of the two-story dormitory. A strong wind whipped the blaze through the structure, dried by the desert sun.

The fire victims died in their beds. Those who escaped jumped through windows. Five men in an adjoining dormitory slept through the entire fire.

The fire department of the camp confined the blaze to the one dormitory, the mess hall and a storehouse.

Frank Crowe, superintendent of Six Companies, said that damage would approximate $100,000. He expressed amazement that the workmen should have been trapped and said that all the dormitory windows opened on the outside.

Crowe said the victims were employed recently and that none of them had worked at Boulder Dam, which Six Companies built. Beyond that, he had no information to identify them.

Parker Dam is reached from Los Angeles by way of Indio, Calif. The dam is being built to provide an intake for the $220,000,000 Colorado River aqueduct, which the water district is constructing.

The fire is the first disaster in the building of the Southern California water supply system.

U. S. Aid Asked To Smash Ice In Buzzards Bay

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Feb. 3.—The Boston Chamber of Commerce asked President Roosevelt tonight to order Government ice breakers into the Buzzards Bay area to avert "a shortage of fuel."

It asked the Secretaries of War and Navy in similar telegrams, to dispatch aid to the Coast Guard forces that have been struggling to keep open the Cape Cod Canal and other ice-choked waterways.

The maritime division of the chamber telegraphed the three executives that 14 tankers are caught in the ice blockade.

"Unless emergency measures are taken," the messages said, "the Boston area will be hit by lack of fuel."

Tomorrow the Coast Guard will send three cutters and a patrol boat to make another onslaught on the icy seal that has been laid on Buzzards Bay. The cutters Algonquin, equipped with an ice-breaking prow, the Mohave, the Ossipee and the patrol boat Faunce have been detailed for this duty, Coast Guard headquarters said.

Ask More Ice Breakers.

The maritime division also dispatched messages tonight to Massachusetts members of Congress, urging them to support the Goldborough bill now pending. This bill would give the Coast Guard 12 ice breakers.

Nantucket Island, cut off from Cape Cod by ice, was visited by planes on three different missions today. Some carried bread and other foodstuffs. A Coast Guard plane dropped the first mail in three days. Tonight another plane, carrying a Works Progress Administration paymaster, alighted on the island.

The WPA pay plane was ordered to the island by Paul Edwards, serving his first day as acting State WPA administrator. Edwards, learning that the 174 workers on the island had been waiting for their pay since Friday, ordered Joseph H. Sylvia, Nantucket County WPA paymaster, to go by plane from Marthas Vineyard.

Sylvia had been trying to reach Nantucket by other means since Friday.

Lightship Regains Position.

The Stone Horse lightship, stationed near Chatham, forced four miles from its post by heavy ice formations, made its way back to its proper position tonight. The lightship has a crew of eight and is commanded by Capt. C. C. Nickerson.

Cape Cod Canal engineers reported a halt in shipping through the canal tonight. They said ice fields were forming faster than Coast Guard ice-breaking craft could clear.

From Crocker Snow, Boston pilot who flew to Nantucket, came information that several vessels were locked in ice a half-mile off Wings Neck light in Buzzards Bay. Snow said he saw men walking on the ice near the boats and a Coast Guard ice breaker was working nearby.

Ice Halts Ships In New York Bay

More than two dozen calls for assistance were received by Coast Guard headquarters.

The choppy waters of the bay swam with blocks of ice. Ice-choked slips delayed the docking of incoming passenger liners and freighters from 90 minutes to 2 hours. Capt. Louis M. Long, of the Haiti, said he saw ice 50 miles out on his northward trip.

Cold Wave

den thaw might send the ice so hard against the ancient Chain Bridge that the span might crumple like match wood. Engineers stilled their fears, however.

Most of the Nation enjoyed what looked like a breathing spell from the intense cold yesterday.

Near blizzard conditions persisted in the Rocky Mountains, the Associated Press reported, and at Havre, Mont., the reading was 18 below, but elsewhere comparative mildness prevailed.

A heavy snow began to fall in Chicago's loop district as the mercury stood at 20.

Nantucket Island was ice-locked and planes were pressed in service to bring the 3,000 residents food.

Fires and traffic accidents, caused by the weather, boosted the death toll by nearly a score. Seven workmen burned to death at Parker Dam Construction Camp, in Colorado, when a blaze destroyed their dormitory. In Regina, Sask., a farmer and his four children died in a fire.

Iowa reported three fire deaths, as did Alabama. An Ohioan died from exposure and monoxide claimed a victim in South Dakota.

At Albert Lea, Minn., the body of a 52-year-old woman was found. She had gone to pray and had frozen to death.

Nudists Bound to Virgin Isles Stranded by Amateur Skipper

Refusal of Licensed Navigators to Doff Clothes for Trip Fails to Daunt Cult, but Boat Lands High and Dry Near Tampa.

By the Associated Press.

Tampa, Fla., Feb. 3.—A party of prospective nudist colonizers who put to sea without a navigator because none would shed his clothes to share their lot were reported aground in their schooner tonight at the mouth of Hillsborough Bay.

Passing freighters brought word of the ship's plight to Tampa. The ship left here bound for the Virgin Islands—1,400 miles away.

Those aboard the freighters that sighted the nudist schooner said she apparently had been left stranded by an ebb tide and might float later on the flood. They said she appeared in no danger.

The craft, a 65-footer, auxiliary-powered, sailed yesterday with its commander, Maurice Allard, founder of the "Vana Vana Society," announcing:

"We can't sign up a navigator. We can't take along anyone who isn't a member of the society."

And there were no navigators along the Tampa docks who would sign up for the nudist project to accept the job.

Waterfronters helped the crew of the schooner, the Fleetwood, load their automobile, supplies, and a deck load of fuel oil, and watched as the craft stood out for the open sea on its 1,400-mile journey.

The Virgin Islands, where the nudists plan their colony, lie east of Puerto Rico, across a strip of Gulf and a broad expanse of the Caribbean Sea.

Their ship carries a barometer, a lifeboat and charts, but it has no sextant and nobody to use it if there were one.

The Vana Vana Society was formed by the Allards, who come from California. There they operated a nudist ranch for the purpose of bringing about establishment of a colony on the little Island of St. Johns—to be conducted co-operatively.

Leaders said 30 to 50 families had enlisted as charter members of the outdoor colony, but not more than 50 were on the boat. They wore clothing when they set sail.

Apparently there isn't any law specifically barring nudists in the Virgin Islands, but officials here indicated yesterday that the group headed there won't get a very warm welcome.

The climate of the islands, said officials of the Interior Department Division of Territories and Insular Possessions, probably is all right. They added, however, that the local laws—apart from Federal statutes—"obviously" would forbid "indecent exposure."

Maddock Woman Held In Bond as Shoplifter

Lillian Maddock, 36, who is on bond awaiting trial for the slaying of Eddie Killeen, Washington gambler, pleaded not guilty and demanded a jury trial yesterday when she was arraigned in Police Court for shoplifting.

Judge John P. McMahon set bond at $300, but did not set a definite date for the trial.

Mrs. Maddock was arrested by Mrs. Pearl Pythian, a policewoman, in a downtown department store Saturday afternoon. The information filed in Police Court charged Mrs. Maddock with taking two pocketbooks, rouge and a bottle of oil, all valued at $6.

She has been arrested for violation of the narcotic act in the District several times during the last ten years, and was on probation last November at the time she shot and killed Killeen.

9 Seized in New York With Bogus Banknotes

New York, Feb. 3 (AP).—In a secret basement in Greenwich Village, authorities tonight seized nine men and $2,197 of faked Federal Reserve banknotes they said were made from plates used by Robert Miller, alias "Count" Victor Lustig, notorious counterfeiter now in prison.

Boys Confess They Held Up Hotel's Clerk

Ex-Pugilist of District and Second Youth, 17, Confess Assaut.

Two boys were being held by police yesterday after they confessed to the brutal beating and robbery of Charles J. Lanks, 27, of the Fairfax Hotel, 2100 Massachusetts avenue northwest, Sunday.

The youths, Thomas W. Daniels, 17, 909 Seventh street southeast, and Sydney Scribner, 18, 536 Seventh street southeast, said to be an amateur boxer, were arrested early yesterday by Detective Sergts. J. J. Tolson Elmer Lewis, Howard Ogle and Howard Smith, near Eleventh and N streets southeast. Police said they will be charged with assault and robbery.

Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, chief of detectives, said Daniels had admitted to more than 15 other holdups, and Thompson said, he implicated the other youth as his companion on many of the jobs.

Lanks, a room clerk at the Fairfax, was attacked by two boys early Sunday morning while he was putting his automobile in a garage in the rear of the hotel. Police said the younger of the two struck Lanks in the face, breaking both his jaws. Lanks was treated at Garfield Hospital.

Reserve Board Faces Ruling On Stock Loans

Board Takes Over Control of Nation's Powers of Credit.

By the Associated Press

A decision on margin requirements for banks against loans on stocks last night confronted the reorganized Federal Reserve Board as its first important task after formally taking office.

Rules governing the extension of credit against stocks by banks were weighed in financial quarters as another check upon speculative activity. Effective last Saturday, the old board boosted margins for brokers in what was interpreted widely as a warning that the Reserve authorities intended to keep a firm hand on the flow of credit into speculative channels.

Tentative regulation in the long-delayed requirements for banks was sent out recently for study and comment by bankers. The new board is expected to act soon, with the possibility it may simplify the bases of calculating margin to apply to both banks and brokers.

With little fanfare, the board yesterday took over its powers for control of the Nation's credit policies as explained by the 1935 banking bill. Marriner S. Eccles, Utah banker and industrialist, was designated by President Roosevelt chairman—as had been expected generally. It is his second year as head of the Reserve System.

The only other hold-over from the old board, M. S. Szymczak, of Chicago, was sworn in along with three new members—Ronald Ransom, of Atlanta; John McKee, of Ohio, and Joseph A. Broderick, of New York.

The sixth member, Ralph W. Morrison, of Texas, had not arrived in Washington. He was expected later in the week. The seventh member is yet to be named. Secretary Morgenthau will meet the members this morning on what he said would be a "purely social" occasion.

There also remains to be organized the open market committee, scheduled to start functioning March 1 to direct open-market activities of the 12 regional banks, chiefly in the purchase and sale of United States Government obligations.

It will consist of the seven board members together with five heads of regional banks, to be named soon.

The Reserve banks have been grouped as follows, each group to select one member for the open market committee: New York and Boston, Philadelphia and Cleveland, Chicago and St. Louis, Richmond, Atlanta and Dallas, and Minneapolis, Kansas City and San Francisco.

The reorganized board took office at a time when idle loanable funds in member banks totaled around record high levels, the Treasury facing heavy financing and with a huge supply of monetary gold and silver in the Treasury's vaults.

Italian Paper Urges Use of Poison Gas

Rome, Feb. 3 (U.P.).—The semi-official newspaper Lavoro Fascista today recommendede widespread use of poison gas in Ethiopia, as Italy's answer to the League of Nations' threat of an oil embargo to halt her war machine.

"There's no time to lose," the article asserted. "We must intensify the rhythm of our resistance to sanctions."

Should use of gas be deemed necessary, it continued, there will be no need to consult "one of the many committees at Geneva, since Ethiopia has occupied itself with the use of dum-dum bullets." Italy has made repeated charges against Ethiopia, alleging indiscriminate use of the outlawed cartridges.

British and French Naval Split May Break Four-Power Parley

Issue Dates Back to Germany's Scrapping of Versailles Treaty; Battleship Age Set at 26 Years by Committee.

By the Associated Press.

London, Feb. 3.—A rift between the British and French delegations over Germany's prospective participation in treaty discussions threatened tonight to break up the four-power naval conference.

France has not yet replied to a new British demand that she agree that outside naval powers, particularly Germany, be invited to send delegations here, but informed quarters felt the reply would be negative.

If it is, the conference is likely to crash because of British insistence on the point, authoritative sources indicated.

This issue goes back to Germany's scrapping of military clauses of the Versailles Treaty last spring. France, nervous over German naval rearmament, contends that participation by Berlin in negotiations here would constitute open approval by the powers of Germany's violation of the treaty.

Another outstanding development today was the acceptance by a technical sub-committee of the American proposal for the extension of the official age of battleships from 20 to 26 years.

The conference must approve the committee's action, but it was believed certain the American plan will be adopted, thereby saving the taxpayers considerable money.

By adding six years to the life of battleships, the powers can wait until 1942 before replacing present ships, thus putting off the heavy expenditure involved. The United States will have seven battleships ready for replacement under existing limitations at the end of 1936; Great Britain one, and Japan, four.

The Americans, who are not participating in the Anglo-French quarrel about German participation, have adopted a non-committal attitude.

Saito Sees No Issue Between U.S., Japan

New York, Feb. 3 (AP).—Hirosi Saito, Japanese Ambassador to the United States, said tonight he was firmly convinced the navies of Japan and the United States would "never be used against one another."

At a dinner held in his honor, Ambassador Saito explained that he was speaking "not only diplomatically but frankly and seriously."

"I cannot believe that such peoples as ours, ranking among the most generous in spirit and the most enlightened, could be so weak in character and stupid of mind as to permit themselves to drift or to be misled into the folly of warfare," he continued.

among leaders that no move would be made at either the White House or Capitol until Chairman Doughton, of the House Ways and Means Committee, returns tomororw from North Carolina.

No immediate pick-up in the inflation drive appeared imminent. Representative Patman (Democrat), of Texas, was expected, however, to assemble some of the currency expansion bloc today to select a special steering committee to guide his campaign for payment of the bonus through the issuance of new money.

On another inflation front it became apparent that a forced vote on the Frazier-Lemke bill to refinance farm mortgages with $3,000,000,000 of new currency was impossible before February 24 at the earliest. A petition to carry the measure to the House floor still lacked 3 of the required 218 signatures of Representatives.

While refusing to engage in controversy with Father Charles E. Coughlin, Treasury officials yesterday took exception to his statement on Sunday about the Nation's gold supply.

Coughlin's statement was:

"There is only $700,000,000 of free gold in the Treasury today, out of a total of $10,179,000,000 which should be wholly in the Government's possession. The privately owned corporation, known as the Federal Reserve Bank, has succeeded in proving that the gold act of 1934, which presumably nationalized all gold, was but a sham gesture."

The Treasury view was outlined by an official in these words:

"All the provisions of the act have been carried out. The Treasury has taken title to all the gold formerly held by the Reserve banks and has issued in exchange either gold certificates or gold certificate credits.

The stocks of Treasury gold on January 1 amounted to $10,182,000,000. It has liabilities against all of this amount except $451,000,000 which constitutes the amount of free gold.

Would Permit Teaching.

Sisson has introduced a bill in the House striking out the word "teach" in the rider, but retaining the restriction against its advocacy.

"The schools of the District of Columbia, the Nation's Capital," he said, amid great applause, "ought to be made models of academic freedom and of freedom of speech in this land where freedom of speech and freedom of thought are supposed to be a part of the bedrock of our institutions."

United States Commissioner of Education Studebaker described the Nation-wide effects of the depression on the public schools of the United States. Aubrey Williams spoke briefly on the work of the National Youth Administration.

Among those present were Dr. Robert Maurer, Georgetown University; Dr. John Whitelaw, George Washington University; Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools; Dr. E. C. Italian Council To Check Plans For Wide War

Rome Has Million Ready for Large Conflict, Survey Shows.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Feb. 3.—Premier Mussolini summoned his all-supreme defense commission to meet with him tomorrow to make sure Italy is ready in the event of a European war.

War plans showing what the 1,000,000-man military machine could do to protect Italy, a 44,000,000 population if League of Nations sanctions result in war will be gone over.

The commission will meet a few hours before the second February session of the Fascist Grand Council to map Italy's immediate military program, chiefly in Africa.

World War "In Offing."

While League experts studied the possibilities of an oil sanction, Virginio Gayda, friend of Il Duce and informed writer, said in an editorial that "this embargo would of itself manifest a step from economic to military sanctions."

A blockade, he warned, would precipitate a world war. Gayda, chief editorial writer of the newspaper Gironale d'Italia, is considered often to express Mussolini's viewpoint.

The daily war communique said the "systemizing" of occupied southern territory is proceeding and that natives there are "co-operating actively with our forces against the nucleus of the Ethiopians in the region. There is nothing to note on the Eritrean front."

The supreme commission of defense, which assembles tomorrow, brings under Mussolini's direct command every means of defense and offense. Its members are in charge of everything military, from the training of youth to the production of shells and the command of troops.

"Observe" in Peace.

Commission members are found in the industrial network which supplies the nation with everything. In peacetime they observe. In wartime they have the power of control.

The defense commission is 12 years old, but African warfare and European sanctions caused Il Duce to increase its membership and widen its scope.

The director of the Bank of Italy may be summoned to talk about the Nation's war time finances.

One of the newer special bodies of the commission is the committee for civilian mobilization, charged with the evacuation of seaport towns in case of bombardment and portection of citizens against aerial attack and gas.

Barrier to Germany

ters of Turkey and Lithuania and the English ambassador. Tomorrow he will consult with Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, vice chancellor of Austria, and Prince Paul, regent of Jugoslavia.

Tomorrow King Carol will be host at one of the greatest diplomatic luncheons in all the post-war years, with major representatives of eight nations at his table.

France's desire to hasten security lies in her fear of eventual violation by Germany of the Rhineland zone, which was not dissipated by recent German assurances to Great Britain. The French are convinced Germany desires to occupy the zone, despite the Versailles Treaty ban on fortifications there for 50 years after the World War ended.

Fears Fortification.

France believes Germany plans to fortify this frontier with the most modern forts and defenses, just as France has done on her side of the border. Such German neutralization of France's defenses would change the complextion of the whole European military map—therefore, the Rhineland zone dominates all the present talks.

If Germany would build such an impregnable wall of fortifications, gun emplacements, underground airdromes and barracks as France has done, Germany, with 200,000 men, could hold her western frontier inviolate and the remainder of her huge military machine could be turned in other directions.

The Little Entente—Rumania, Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia—knows that; Russia knows it, France knows it, and, above all, Austria knows it.

Austria would have most to fear from German expansion and the Little Entente would be next. Rumania, with exactly the natural products Germany and other European powers need most—oil and wheat—is especially nervous. Hence the leading part King Carol and his foreign minister, Nicholas Titulescu, are taking in present negotiations, ably seconded by Flandin.

Titulescu always has been an ardent supporter of Russia and now, more than ever, feels that Russia must be among the guarantors of central European security. If Germany does heavily fortify her western frontier, France would find it difficult to come to the aid of her central European allies in case they were attacked. So Titulescu looks to Russia.

It was Titulescu who attempted to revive the proposed Danube pact, suggesting that Russia replace Italy in the projected agreement. France, however, fears giving Russia too important a role in central Europe at this time and desires to shelve a Danubian pact until such time as Italy is free to participate. England is reported to share this view.

Starhemberg is understood to favor restoration of the Hapsburg dynasty in Austria as the best preventative step to curb Germany's covetous desires in that direction. The Little Entente, however, is firmly opposed to that step and it is believed Flandin tomorrow will warn Starhemberg that the Hapsburg restoration must be shelved indefinitely.

Bell Wins $9.60 Bet On 'Balanced Budget'

By the Associated Press.

Treasury officials chuckled yesterday over a letter from Daniel Bell, acting director of the budget.

On vacation in Florida, Bell wrote that he had bet on a horse named "Balanced Budget" in the races at Hialeah, near Miami, last Friday.

The horse won, he said, and paid $9.60 on a $2 ticket.

Russia Accuses Japan of Raids In Soviet Areas

Nipponese Scouts Invade Manchukuoan Limits, Report Says.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Feb. 3.—Soviet Russia's Far Eastern army high command, in an unusual step today, issued a communique accusing Japanese and Manchukuoan troops of "provocatory raids" into Soviet territory.

Soldiers of the Japanese-sponsored state of Manchukuo, the communique asserted, have taken up a position near the Soviet border and are dispatching scouts into Russian territory.

Latest in Strained Relations.

This was the latest development in a long series of border incidents which have strained relations between Moscow and Tokyo.

The communique, issued from Khabarovsk and made public in Moscow, said three Russians were killed and seven wounded in a hand-to-hand fight with Japanese-Manchukuoans on January 30. The latter were driven back February 1, the Soviet account said, the two companies of Japanese-Manchukuoan troops assumed a position on the frontier on that date.

The communique asserted a company of Manchukuoan soldiers rebelled, and after slaying four Japanese officers, crossed the border and were interned by Soviets January 29.

Return of Rebels.

"It is obvious the main purpose of the present Japanese-Manchukuoan provocatory raids is to force a return of the Manchukuoan rebels," the communique said.

"The campaign of lies and provocations by the Japanese army has been going on since 1931."

The Soviet communique denied one reportedly issued by the Japanese army staff asserting the revolt of the Manchukuoans was inspired by Soviets and that the battle of January 30 was fought on Manchukuo territory against the rebels.

Textbooks Free Of Red 'Taint,' Committee Says

Kramer Group Reports Tomorrow to Board of Education.

None of the magazines or periodicals in use in the city's vocational schools are tainted with "communistic leanings" in the opinion of the special committee appointed recently by the Board of Education to investigate charges that "red" periodicals are being used in local schools.

The report of the committee, headed by Dr. Stephen E. Kramer, first assistant superintendent in charge of junior and senior high schools, will be submitted to the Board of Education at its meeting tomorrow.

Later in the week a similar "white" list of periodicals in use in the academic schools is expected to be completed. Excluded temporarily from this list, however, will be several journals that have been singled out for special attack by George E. Sullivan, chairman of the "red" investigating committee of the Federation of Citizens Associations.

Exclusion of these periodicals, including "scholastic" and several of the leading journals of opinion, is not necessarily final, it was pointed out, the committee merely desiring more time to consider how "dangerous" the publications are.

At tomorrow's meeting the Board of Education also will receive a report from Jere J. Crane, first assistant superintendent in charge of business affairs, outlining a plan for improving the road approaches to Browne Junior High School, Phelps Trade School and Young elementary school, all bordering on Bening road northeast.

Superintendent of Schools Dr. Frank W. Ballou will submit the last two of his series of eight fact-finding reports in preparation for the new five-year building program now being drawn up. The reports estimating future enrollments in senior and junior high schools from 1937 through 1942 indicate that school construction must be geared to take care of a school population of from 110,000 to 115,000 within five years. The present total enrollment in the city's schools is 92,836.

$10,000 Bond Is Fixed For Man in Holdup Case

Reuben Rose, 44, 938 I street northwest, pleaded not guilty, and was ordered held under $10,000 bond yesterday, when arraigned before Police Court Judge John P. McMahon on a charge of robbery.

Rose was charged with holding up the Star Liquor Store, 513 Eleventh street northwest, January 13.

Detective Sergt. Earl Baker, of the robbery squad, arrested Rose several days ago. He was identified in a line-up at Police Headquarters by Lyle Hodgedon, manager of the liquor store. Hodgedon said $450 was taken.

Rose has been convicted of robbery before, and has a record at the Department of Justice for dealing in narcotics.

Last of River Packets Sinking in Mississippi

Vicksburg, Miss., Feb. 3 (AP).—The steamer "Tennessee Belle," last of the famous Mississippi River packets, was reported by its operators as sinking tonight two miles south of Lake Providence, La., after striking a submerged obstruction.

H. C. Renaudin, local agent for the New Orleans & Vicksburg Packet Co., operators of the steamer, said it sank six feet and was still going down. The hold was flooded and 50 members of the crew under Capt. J. E. Dicharry, veteran steamboat pilot, worked frantically to save the cargo.

Miners Listen Closely to Labor Leader's Pleas

Green's Plea Rejected

vention in Atlantic City, voted down the industrial-unionists by an 18-to-11 average, indicating that the committee for industrial organization possesses 1,100,000 men in its ranks, leaving 1,900,000 craftsunionists maintaining a majority of the A. F. of L. membership of 3,000,000.

Green, in making his dramatic appearance before the cold and skeptical audience of mine union delegates yesterday, referred repeatedly to this action, emphasizing that as president of the federation he was bound to abide by the majority demand in insisting that all organizations within the federation not in accord with its policies be disbanded.

Directly in threat, shaking both fists wide at arm's-length, he shouted:

"The American Federation of Labor will not tolerate within its ranks any organization challenging the authority of the parent organization."

Audience Hostile.

Despite a number of emotional references to his long service as secretary and treasurer of the mine union, his 20 years in the mines hacking coal, and his intention to serve the Mine workers' interests "until my dying breath," Green faced a hostile audience that grew more and more restless and antagonistic as he continued his plea.

When he said, in outlining his position as president of the federation, "What can I do?" someone answered sharply:

"Quit!"

When he referred to President Lewis, who sat impassive, chewing an unlit cigar quietly, head thrown back in his great red-leather chair, the delegates cheered lustily, the first sound that had stirred the audience except for a minor cough or a smattering of applause from the galleries. When he then added, "Ah, I see you applaud, my friends ——" the miners booed him to the echo to indicate the applause was entirely for Lewis.

Reception Wounds Green.

When Green, obviously hurt by the reception from his own union, the union he represents while acting as president of the A. F. of L., finished, some delegate shouted caustically:

"Back to the mines, Bill!"

It was in this atmosphere that the federation president strove with the Mine Workers' convention, now in its second week. Last week the intensity of the mine men's demand for furtherance of industrial unionism had resulted in a threat of secession, backed up by authorization for Lewis and the other officers to withhold the Mine Workers' annual dues of $48,000 "should conditions warrant."

Green hastened back over the week-end from the Miami, Fla., meeting the executive council of the A. F. of L., and appeared yesterday afternoon in a desperate attempt to argue the Mine Workers into solidarity with the A. F. of L. before they took even more drastic action.

Extemporizes Much.

In the glare of floodlights set up for the convenience of the photographers, Green, in a chocolate-brown suit and dark tie, his rosy face smiling with eagerness for the fray, pince-nez glasses perched sharply on his nose, moved rapidly to the microphone and launched without prelude into his address, almost entirely extemporaneous.

He began by saying:

"I am fully conscious of my responsibility and the significance of this occasion."

He then outlined his long record of service to the Mine Workers' Union, his voice breaking with emotion and his tense realization of the audience's coldness. Rubbing damp palms on the lapels of his coat, shaking his spatulate-fingered, square hands high, his gray, wispy hair jerking over his forehead, the federation president emphasized these points:

That all differences in the A. F. of L. must be composed to present "a common labor front to the common enemy."

Calls A. F. of L. Supreme.

That the United Mine Workers, as the child organization of the parent group, must adhere to the will of a majority of the parent body.

That industrial unionism, "haunting us like Banquo's ghost," is not a new issue, but one which historically was in opposition to the A. F. of L. when the latter group was founded.

That the railroad brotherhoods and the printing industry workers particularly would not leave craftsunionism for industrial unionism.

That previous conventions have repeatedly met the issue and decided for crafts unionism, and that as president, he must carry out those wishes, "no matter what my personal convictions."

That labor is now faced with a choice, either to "unite our forces on a basis of accommodation and yield to the will of the majority," or to "divide and be conquered."

He said:

"If you are willing to enter the open quorum of debate, you ought to be willing to abide by the decision. . . . This is a matter of supreme concern to me . . . The United Mine Workers in the past have been harassed, troubled, concerned, weakened by organizations within itself before . . . In other evil days I and the federation have come to your aid. Evil days may come again. To whom then can we turn for help and assistance? . . . In 1927 the federation turned over to your secretary-treasurer $500,000 for your aid . . . Don't make these your enemies, make them your friends!

A. F. of L. Base Called Firm.

"If you do go out, there will be but one result. The American Federation of Labor will remain supreme. Attacks from within or without can never shake it from its firm foundation."

Lewis then stepped into the flare of the floodlights and, ignoring cries of "Now's your chance, John! Let 'em have it!" made his dramatic gesture of asking those who had changed their beliefs to stand. Green said, in the hurly-burly on the platform, "What could you expect?" and then added a hasty "No comment!" to reporters crowding around.

The morning session had seen tumultuous applause accorded Gov. George H. Earle of Pensylvania as he made an address declaring the "NRA the greatest law ever written upon the statute books of America" and attacking Al Smith, the American Liberty League, the "du Ponts of Delaware" and the "spokesmen for special interests who have suddenly discovered a great love for States rights."

Earle, who was introduced by Thomas Kennedy, his lieutenant governor, at the convention in his capacity of secretary-treasurer of the mine union, asked for the re-election of President Roosevelt "in order that the great humanitarian work he has begun may go on."

Referring to the stake of the miner in the Guffey coal act, he said:

"The entire Nation is waiting anxiously to see what the Supreme Court will do. There are hundreds of thousands of suffering families in Pennsylvania's soft-coal regions, in miserable company towns and in tarpaper shacks, that are waiting, too . . . The judicial death of the Guffey coal bill means a return of the economic slavery of the bituminous miner and his family."

Divorce Statute In D. C. Upheld As Retroactive

U. S. Appeals Court Rules Grounds Existing on Aug. 7 Included.

With but one dissenting voice, the United States Court of Appeals held yesterday the District's "Renovized" divorce law is retroactive as of the date it was enacted, August 7, 1935.

In a majority opinion written by Chief Justice George Martin, the court ruled that the law was intended by Congress to give relief to persons who came within its provisions prior to its actual enactment. This means, the Appellate Court said, that desertion for two years, separation for five years, or conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude with a sentence of not less than two years were each sufficient for a divorce as of the date of the new law.

The question was brought up in a suit filed by Elizabeth W. Tipping, in which she asked for an absolute divorce from Jacob Ronald K. Tipping, in which she citted a separation in March, 1927. One month after the new law went into effect, she filed suit, and Justice Jennings Bailey, eager to have a higher court ruling, appointed attorneys to defend Tipping, who was absent.

Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue, in the District Supreme Court, held the law was retroactive and included all persons who had grounds for divorce as of the date of enactment of the law. His opinion was challenged by Bruce Aitchinson, attorney for the husband, and the United States Court of Appeals granted an emergency appeal.

More than 1,000 divorce suits, now pending, were affected by the ruling, together with more than 200 decrees which have been granted by the District Supreme Court.

The opinion holds that the act affected conditions existing when it was signed by the President, as well as those accruing afterward.

Strike Takes Meat From English Menu

London, Feb. 3 (AP).—Meatless menus confronted southern England tonight because of a strike by Smithfield Market's 10,000 workers, a large army of burly men, who for some reason wear summer straw hats all the year round.

Practically none of the 3,000 tons of meat supplied daily to London from this market, the world's largest, moved today.

The strike, it was believed, might even spread to dock and railway workers.

It sprang from dissatisfaction with what the men called unnecessary delay by a conciliation board handling their demands for more money. At a mass meeting tonight the meat strikers decided not to return to work.

2,000 Frenchmen Go On Strike at Shipyard

St. Nazaire, France, Feb. 3 (AP).—Protesting against the government's 10 per cent cut, more than 2,000 shipyard workers went on strike here today.

Pickets were placed near the big Penhoet Yards.

A workers' council studied measures to be taken in case the walkout should be of long duration.

It was not immediately known whether shipyard workers at Le Havre, where the big liner Normandie is undergoing repairs, at Laciotat and at Brest would take similar action.

Band's Walkout Closed Incident, Congress Rules

Letter Explaining 'Snub' to Women's Rally Tabled Without Debate.

The walkout of the United States Marine Band from a meeting of the Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense last week, yesterday became a closed incident so far as Congress is concerned.

Chairman Vinson, of the House Naval Affairs Committee, read a letter from Henry L. Roosevelt, Acting Secretary of the Navy, explaining why the orders were issued. The resolution introduced by Representative Darrow (Republican), of Pennsylvania, was tabled without debate.

The order to Capt. Taylor Branson, leader of the Marine Band, came directly from "the Assistant Secretary of the Navy" (Mr. Roosevelt), the letter stated, through the customary subsidiary channels.

Explaining the cause of the order, Mr. Roosevelt wrote:

"On 10 December, 1935, the Navy Department granted the request of Mrs. Mary Logan Tucker for a section of the Marine Band to furnish music at the banquet of the Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense, to be given 28 January, 1936.

"This was done in accordance with the established policy of long standing, by which the band is permitted to play at patriotic gatherings of national import.

"On the opening day of the conference, Monday, 27 January, 1936, the leading address was made, which was political in character, and on account of the political color given to the conference by this speech, it appeared improper that the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps should participate under orders or official sanction. Accordingly, the above direction was issued."

The Darrow resolution asked for a written copy of the order, but the Acting Secretary explained that all orders were transmitted verbally and are not of record.

Direct Election At Alexandria Officials Asked

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU,
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

Two bills introduced yesterday in the Virginia House of Delegates by Delegate Maurice D. Rosenberg, of Alexandria, involved changes in the election of city officials here.

One bill provides that the city attorney and the city collector be elected by popular vote, provided that the people of Alexandria approve such procedure in a popular referendum. At present, these officials are appointed.

The other bill provides for the popular election of civil and police judges.

Passage of bill, however, would make the election of these officials mandatory, inasmuch as there is no provision for a referendum vote.

Lee Lauds Humanitarian Acts Of Roosevelt to Young Voters

Oklahoma Representative Is Heard by Silver Spring Democrat Group; Says U. S. Cannot Stop Its Relief Spending Now.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Telephone, Sligo 2363.

President Roosevelt has kept faith with the spirit of the Constitution and the Democratic platform, even though the Supreme Court and his critics contend that he is technically short of the letter of the law, Representative Josh Lee, of Oklahoma, told the Young Men Democratic Club of Silver Spring last night at an open meeting in the Jessup Blair Community House at Silver Spring.

The President has kept to the humanitarian spirit of both instruments through his efforts on behalf of suffering humanity and his programs for relieving misery, Representative Lee said.

"Do they want him to stop the CCC camps, agricultural aid or relief?" Lee asked. "I'd like to stop spending. I'd like to vote for less taxes. But how can this be done when the needs of the country demand that we keep on?"

"When the mistakes of the Roosevelt Administration are balanced against the condition of the country when he took office I think it stands unimpeached," the speaker said. He cited the increase in employment and the beginning of the return of prosperity.

Virginia Makes Move for Road Condemnation

Papers Filed Ask Tract Be Confiscated Through Langhorne Estate.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Cla. 500. Clarendon, Va.

Determined to proceed with obtaining all rights of way for the completion of the Lee boulevard from Lyon Park to the Arlington Memorial Bridge, condemnation proceedings were instituted by Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence W. Douglas yesterday. The papers, which were filed in the county clerk's office, call for the condemning of a tract of land through what is known as the Langhorne estate in the vicinity of Fort Myer. The suit is brought in the name of the Virginia State Highway Department.

Douglas stated that there is but one other case where it may be necessary to resort to legal action to obtain the needed rights of way, but in this case efforts are now being made to effect an agreement with the State to acquire the land. There are, he said, other cases, but in all instances agreements have been reached and all that is now necessary is to examine titles, after which payment by the State will be made for the land.

Indications are now, it is said, that within the next 60 days the State highway department will be in a position to advertise for bids and work started during the early spring.

Edgar W. Pumphrey, commander of Arlington Post, No. 139, American Legion, announces that the legion hall at Clarendon will be open tomorrow night from 7 to 11 o'clock to take fingerprints and assist veterans in filling out their application for the bonus.

An invitation is extened to all veterans in the county to avail themselves of this opportunity. There will be no fee charged for the filling out of applications.

The meeting of the Arlington County Civic Federation to be held tonight at the Lyon Park Community House will be opened with memorial services in memory of F. E. Mann, of Cherrydale, and Gilson Gardner, of Arlington Ridge, late members of the Federation.

Among other matters to come before the meeting will be the proposed change of the zoning ordinance to prohibit the erection of apartment houses in residential sections, a report from the committee of county revenues and expenditures, and the bill now before the State Senate to give property owners right of appeal from assessments of their property when considered to high.

County Police Officer James D. East, a veteran member of the force known to thousands of school children as "Uncle Jim," is in Emergency Hospital in Washington suffering from a broken neck. East, for the past eight years, has been detailed to duty at the Washington-Lee High School, where he is a favorite among the sudents.

The injury, at first believed slight, was received late Saturday evening when the automobile in which he and his son were riding skidded on an icy side road near Glencarlyn and turned over. The boy was unhurt and East was taken to his home by a passing motorist. Thinking his injury was not serious, he said he would be ready to return to work yesterday to look after the boys and girls at the high school. Yesterday he became worse and was taken to the hospital, where it is said his condition is serious.

The ladies of Walker Chapel Methodist Church will serve a turkey dinner at the church tomorrow evening beginning at 5 o'clock. Mrs. Herbert Todd is general chairman in charge of arrangements.

Warren, 'Maker Of Presidents,' Dies in Detroit

Senate Refused to Give Him Cabinet Post, but Nation Gave a D.S.C.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Feb. 3.—Charles Beecher Warren, an international lawyer and a diplomat, and some times called a maker of Presidents, died today at the age of 65. Death was due to heart disease.

His services to his country won him the Distinguished Service Medal. He was given ambassadorial posts in Japan and Mexico, but was denied a Cabinet position, for which he twice was nominated.

On both occasions that President Coolidge nominated him for Attorney General the Senate refused confirmation, because of his connection with sugar interests that then were under fire by the Federal Trade Commission.

President Wilson decorated Warren for his part in writing and administering the war-time draft law. For a time, Warren was legal adviser to the American delegation at the Versailles peace conference.

At the age of 20 he was associate counsel for the United States in litigation with Great Britain over the Bering Sea claims. Fourteen years later he and Elihu Root represented the United States in North Atlantic fisheries arbitration.

Warren was a powerful factor in Republican national conventions of 1908, 1912, 1920 and 1924. From 1912 until 1920 he was a member of the Republican national committee. In 1912 he was chairman of a sub-committee that rewrote the convention rules after the withdrawal of Theodore Roosevelt delegates.

In 1924 he was chairman of the resolutions committee and wrote most of the platform on which Calvin Coolidge was elected President.

Appointed Ambassador to Japan in 1920, Warren was instrumental in cancellation of the Lansing-Ishii agreement of 1917. That agreement, designed to affirm the "open door" principle in China, had caused much confusion by inclusion of a clause recognizing Japan's "paramount interest." His appointment as Ambassador to Mexico followed shortly his resignation from the Japanese post.

Sharing of Slash In Rates Studied

Distribution of the $310,360 cut in electric power bills was studied yesterday by the Public Utilities Commission, which hopes to promulgate today the rate schedules for this year.

Commissioner Riley E. Elgen said the commission is attempting to determine whether the allocation of the rate cut among various types of consumers, as suggested by the Potomac Electric Power Co., is equitable.

Under the proposed new schedule, 53,000 small consumers would get no reduction; 49,000 other domestic consumers would share a cut of $69,537, while the balance of the cut would go to the larger commercial customers. The District and Federal government light bills would be reduced by $83,000.

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

This Old Treatment Often Brings Happy Relief Of Pain

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are one of Nature's chief ways of taking the acids and waste out of the blood. If they don't pass 3 pints a day and so get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter, your 15 miles of kidney tubes may need flushing.

If you have trouble with frequent bladder passages with scanty amount which often smart and burn, the 15 miles of kidney tubes may need flushing out. This danger signal may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes and dizziness.

Don't wait for serious trouble. Ask your druggist for DOAN'S PILLS—which have been used successfully for over 40 years by millions of people. They give happy relief and will help flush out the 15 miles of kidney tubes. Get DOAN'S PILLS —Advt.

Chile's Army Seizes Control of Railways

Santiago, Chile, Feb. 3 (U.P.).—Chilean army troops took over the state railways tonight after striking railroad employes had derailed three trains.

The strike began this morning in the southern zone and quickly spread to three other zones, threatening tie-up of all transportation and possible walkout o' 18,000 workers.

The government reported the trains deliberately derailed. There were no casualties.

Seriousness of the situation prompted the government to appoint Gen. Juan Contreras as military head of the state-owned railroad system and Col. Manuel Campos as military director, with power to act as they saw fit.

Troops were sent into zones with orders to take over the suspended services and operate trains.

All railway stations were placed under guard.

Pot And Kettle.

Many factors account for the tangled condition of the pending neutrality legislation. But one characteristic has been of paramount influence in creating the confusion which now threatens enactment of any law to replace the present temporary act. This is the propagandist approach, using preconceived convictions on a problem far too intricate to be solved by such oversimplified thinking.

Some aspects of the propagandist approach were bitterly attacked by John Bassett Moore in the statement before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to which Senator Hiram Johnson has given unusual publicity. Dr. Moore apparently resents the pacifist demand for neutrality at any price, the effort to pillory munition makers and bankers as a chief cause of war, and the attitude of those who favor American co-operation with the peace-preservation efforts of the League of Nations. "A plague of propagandists," he says, "has deprived our people and their rulers of the faculty of reason."

Unfortunately Dr. Moore, for all his eminence in the somewhat rarified and tenuous atmosphere of international law, is not above suspicion of being tarred with the same brush which he applied so liberally to others. The tenor of his remarks is far from being that of a judicious scholar. It is, on the contrary, shot through with a bitterness against the League of Nations, and a seeming desire to have American policy frustrate its efforts, which go far to rob his observations of constructive influence.

In the minds of some members of the Foreign Relations Committee the chief objective of neutrality legislation seems to be to hamstring the efforts of Geneva. Although many American jurists are available to testify to the desirability of a sympathetic American attitude toward collective action, only two who oppose—Profs. Borchard and John Bassett Moore alone have been summoned by the committee. Testimony at variance with the preconceived convictions of the dominant committee members is not wanted.

Such tactics, in a problem as complicated as neutrality, are most unfortunate. Of course, in the long run the legislators who espouse them will defeat their own ends. But in so doing they will further muddle the thinking of the country by spreading more of that same type of inflammatory propaganda which they so furiously resent when used by others.

Mr. Thomas Blunts His Barbs.

Norman Thomas, perennial Socialist candidate for a variety of public offices, properly resents the assertions of several recent speakers that the Roosevelt Administration has carried out the Socialist platform. He will concede only that the President might have "carried it out on a stretcher," observing that the trend of the New Deal is closer to fascism than to socialism.

Coming at a time when deliberate analysis is rare, Mr. Thomas' radio address is a welcome offset to the fuzzy thinking and abuse of terms which have filled many recent political outbursts. With seeming impartiality, he has exposed gross fallacies in all political camps—except his own. What is more important, he has swept away superficial resemblances between the New Deal and the Socialist platform, leaving their fundamental contrasts clear in the public mind. The Roosevelt Administration, he says, is merely trying to patch up the capitalistic system, while the Socialists demand outright public ownership and control of the means of production. That basic distinction can be overlooked only by politicians seeking catch phrases.

This repudiation of the New Deal by the Socialist leader puts the Administration in an odd position. Al Smith and John W. Davis have accused the President of deserting the Democratic Party. To that extent Mr. Thomas checks their reasoning, but he regards the New Deal as a form of State capitalism such as "the Fascist demagogues of Europe have used when they came to power." As our embryonic Fascists come forth and disavow any sympathy for the diverse policies of the Administration, it will be left in splendid isolation. Then, perhaps, the silly practice of bandying "isms" about will give way to discussion of the real issues.

Unfortunately, it is at this point that Mr. Thomas weakens. His withering denunciation of both the major parties and their factions was not followed up by a practical approach to the really grave problems which confront the country. In the process of socializing industrial production he would set up a national economic planning council, with directorates over each industry, to represent the workers, consumers and technicians. Congress would remain on the job to formulate broad policies for the national welfare, but there would be no 'Socialist Jim Farleys" to distort the idyllic picture. On the other hand, no dictatorship would be tolerated.

When Mr. Thomas talks of a great socialistic democracy without self-seeking politicians, or of efficient governmental operation of industry without virtual dictatorship, he postulates a new civilization in which human nature would have to be substantially modified. That is wishful thinking, strikingly at variance with the Socialist leader's vigorous attack on capitalistic dogmas.

The Wild Life Conference.

Jay Darling, wise and somewhat cynical from his years in Washington, is still a John the Baptist of the conservation movement, but only the superficial observer will think that his message to the Wild Life Conference yesterday was merely a plea for wild ducks, white-tailed deer and wall-eyed pike.

His emphatic and stern oration of alarm was an exposition of a fact that is gradually and belatedly dawning on the American people, namely that wild life environment, industry, agriculture, and the safeguarding of all our natural wealth are all bound necessarily and closely together in a problem that involves the advancement or the decline of the Republic.

Dabblers in the conservation movement, and those who think that in the word the letters "v" and "s" might as well be interchanged, are largely innocent of the fact that environment is the biggest factor in the preservation of wild life, and of all life, and that environment is a matter of hundreds of millions of acres, and plays a most significant part in our national economy.

Environment for wild life does not pertain merely to game birds, fish and animals, but to such economic factors as the almost extinct herring and whitefish industries of the Great Lakes, the once plentiful shad in the Potomac, a threatened $10,000,000 salmon industry in the Columbia River, the dwindling tuna fish industry of lower California, and millions of dollars' worth of fur harvested annually. Even these important items form only a part of the greater picture.

Every one of the millions of creeks in the United States is a possible environment for fish and other aquatic life, birds, animals, vegetation, bordering plant, shrub and tree growths—a potential erosion area, a potential contributor to cataclysmic floods, a factor in drought, and in a general forestation program. Every marshy area is significant, for its drainage adds to an already existing land surplus. Every reclaimed desert does the same, at the same time altering the conditions related to wild life.

This gives an inkling of the importance of the message Jay Darling brings, not only to the North American Wild Life Conference, but to the American people as a whole.

Up to the present the conservation of wild life, involving such important environmental factors as Government-owned grazing lands, marshy areas, deserts, marginal lands, erosion areas, forest tracts, a reoriented land-use policy, prevention of pollution and related subjects, has been a subject almost wholly neglected by Federal and State governments. Projects vitally affecting such factors are referred to engineers or politicians and not to agricultural or wild life experts.

The sportsmen are the least of the sufferers. Commercial fisheries, the fur trade, agriculture, maladjustment of industry and public health are all affected. This state of affairs is one of the chief motivations of the current Wild Life Conference, which will probably develop into a broader field involving conservation as a whole.

It is to be hoped that the conference may carry the message forcefully to the whole nation in such a way that conservation may no longer be regarded as the esthetic dream of nature-loving visionaries, but a factor that vitally affects the welfare of every citizen. All life, after all, is dependent upon Nature's bounty, and its conservation, in the large sense, has to do with a genuine economic planning—the proper use of all natural, life-sustaining forces, without waste or false steps.

Quite So.

The death of Owen Seaman removes one of England's most versatile verse makers, a master of the rare and adventurous arts of parody and the political poem. The loss to England's journalism is, however, still greater. Sir Owen was for over a quarter-century the editor of Punch and, even after his formal retirement, continued to be its consultative inspiration.

Humorous magazines are likely to be either petty or partisan. When Seaman came to Punch, succeeding a distinguished list of predecessors, that magazine generally avoided both these faults. It was as British as the House of Commons and as much a part of English life as English tea or English weather. His task was to maintain this standard, and maintain it he did, so valiantly that all savor went from the old saw about Punch being not as good as it used to be.

"Humor," he used to declare, "is a solvent against shams, . . . a corrective against vulgarities." Thanks largely to "O. S.," the abundant fun of Punch fulfilled his definition. But if that British institution still seems alien to most Americans, that is precisely because it is made of English clay. For Sir Owen also said: "Understatement is the most characteristic ingredient of English humor; American humor is quite the opposite."

Two Good Appointments.

The strong administrative setup of the Social Security Board will be further strengthened by the appointment of Dr. Walton H. Hamilton as director, and Ewan Clague as assistant director, of the board's Bureau of Research and Statistics. Dr. Hamilton, who has served with distinction in various administrative posts in the Government, is at present director of the consumers' division of the Department of Labor. Prior to that appointment, he was director of the consumers' division of the NRA, and still earlier a member of the National Industrial Recovery Board. Since 1928 he has held the position of professor of public law at Yale and has taught economics and government in various institutions.

Dr. Clague is a member of the advisory committee of the Secretary of Labor and the committee on government statistics and information services. He is also professor of social research at the Pennsylvania School of Social Work. In both cases the combination of administrative experience with specialized training is most fortunate. Under the guidance of a qualified personnel the Social Insurance Board will be able to discover with a minimum loss of time and energy what changes are needed to correct defects and cover the inadequacies of an untried, highly complicated legislative program.

Often it is impossible to decide whether laws or individuals are most to blame for the difficulties that necessarily arise in testing out new experiments. In this case, there is good reason to believe that any changes or revisions that prove to be necessary will be due to imperfections in the law, not to bungling administration.

A New Task For The A. G.

President Roosevelt's request for repeal of the drastic measures for control of cotton, tobacco and potato crops may be properly regarded as house cleaning. He asks Congress to sweep away the debris left by the devastating Supreme Court decision in the Hoosac Mills case. Yet the attitude of the President in thus anticipating further action by the court may be significant.

Presumably the Administration is interested in preventing a recurrence of the befuddlement and injustices resulting from the temporary enforcement of unconstitutional laws, as well as in clearing the statute books of measures that are certainly doomed. It will be interesting to see what precautions are taken to avoid such tremendous wastage of energy and public confidence in the future. There does not seem to be much possibility of making all acts constitutional beyond a shadow of doubt, but any conscientious administration should be able to secure a better batting average on major laws than the President has to date.

One obvious step forward would be rehabilitation of the office of Attorney General. Throughout that hectic period when the New Deal was in the making, the chief legal adviser of the Government remained entirely in the background. Did he have a suspicion that some of the measures sponsored by the Administration of which he was a part were repugnant to the fundamental law? That query may never be answered, but it is certain that if sound legal advice was given it went unheeded.

Considerably more attention is now being given to the constitutional aspects of legislation. The Attorney General and the Solicitor General attended various conferences from which plans for a substitute AAA recently emerged. Mr. Reed testified secretly on the subject before the Senate Agriculture Committee. Still the public is in the dark as to the Attorney General's candid views on the legality of the proposed new measures. Such procedure is patently unsatisfactory.

If the minister of justice in a truly responsible cabinet should permit his government to be caught in such a tangle as that in which the Roosevelt Administration now finds itself, he would be expected to resign forthwith. There seems to have been no thought of similar action here, because the Attorney General did not assume responsibility in the eyes of the public for the New Deal's unconstitutional measures. The point is that such responsibility ought to be definitely placed and the Attorney General is the proper official to bear it.

It is the duty of the Executive and the Legislature as well as the courts to preserve the Constitution, while sponsoring amendments they may consider advisable. Responsibility has fallen so heavily upon the courts simply because it has been so grossly neglected by the other two branches of government. Unless the Administration intends to continue blundering along a path that has already seriously impaired its prestige, it should charge the Attorney General with the task, not only of defending laws before the Supreme Court, but also of keeping proposed new measures within the Constitution.

Another thing the Government might do in connection with soil erosion is to stop politicians from throwing mud.

The nuts in a political party are usually pulled out by the bolts.

Still Better Than Spoils.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial of January 21 lamenting the decline in the number of civil service appointments in the Federal Government overlooks, I think, one vitally important point. Just what is the "civil service" or "merit" system that the editorial writer would like to return to?

What price "merit" system when during the past three Republican Administrations three or four States exceeded by an enormous margin their quotas of civil service appointees, although the law provides that appointments shall always be kept apportioned among the States? If I recall correctly from one of Mr. Baker's articles in your columns, Vermont, Ohio and Utah were among the States which supplied a disproportionately large number of civil service appointees under the regimes of Harding (Ohio), Coolidge (from Vermont originally) and Hoover.

Is it possible that the Civil Service Commission was obliged to disregard the apportionment rule because of the great number of brilliant applicants from these States? Or, in the case of Utah for example, did the fact that Senator Reed Smoot was "very active on behalf of his constituents" have an influence with the appointing officers? It is obvious that civil service in the past was not immune to poitical considerations.

Furthermore, what is so desirable about the old "merit" system under which veterans and veterans' widows, no matter how unqualified, are legally pushed to the top of the appointment lists? Does it promote efficiency and good morale to make the Government service into a charitable institution? And is there any guarantee that in the upper brackets of civil service positions, where applicants are not obliged to take an "assembled" examination, the spirit of the merit system was regularly observed in past years? I know of at least one such unassembled "examination" which was postponed several times until the man who had already been privately selected for the job returned from a European jaunt.

I certainly do not condone an out and out spoils system, but at least let us admit that a departure from the old so-called merit system may not be a bad thing after all.

A Vote Of Thanks.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A vote of thanks from all who have occasion to use the corner of Columbia and Ontario roads should be extended to Mrs. Mabel Benson Sakis, one of our able Washington attorneys, who was instrumental in having traffic lights placed at this very dangerous intersection, and to the Commissioners, who were kind enough to grant the requests of the petitioners, which she presented to them.

It is regretted that only after an elderly man was severely injured and nearly lost his life at that corner such protection could be granted the rest of us, but we are indeed grateful that at last we have it.

The Tragedy Of Spoils.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Realizing that it is impossible for me to add anything to your editorial, "The Forgotten Principle," nevertheless, I would like to voice an "Amen." To my mind the scrapping of the merit system is one of he greatest sins that has been committed by the present Administration.

One is reminded of the days of Jackson and Grant, when political office seekers and patronage politicians dominated the Government. But spoilsmen of those days cannot compare with Jim Farley and his cohorts. The present machine is favored with many advantages over former ones. There is apparently no limit to the money which it has at its command. Consequently jobs are relatively plentiful for those who vote "right." The strangest sight to behold these days is a Democrat who hasn't held a Government job during this Administration.

It is a sad picture to recall how the merit system grew and developed from the passage of the Pendleton act in 1883 to 1933, and then realize that much of the spirit of this great reform movement has been destroyed by our present-day spoilsmen. Every President from Arthur through Hoover, Democrats and Republicans alike, added Government positions to the merit system. While patronage continued to remain an harassing problem, yet there was a pronounced tendency to raise the personnel of our Government to that standard maintained by Great Britain.

I do not claim to foresee the ill effects that this political corruption will have on our Government in the future, but at least President Roosevelt has established an undesirable precedent.

The South Laughs.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have just had the pleasure of reading the letter submitted by one who calls himself James Harrison.

I must admit it is the most absurd thing I have read since Benchley's "Love Among the Thinkers." May I suggest that this type of letter affords a laugh all around and hurts no one. However, as ridiculous as the letter is, I feel it is my duty as a Southerner to take issue with our Northern friend who lives in Virginia—probably against his will—and quotes Dickens so fluently.

He suggests that we would be spared the infamy of seeing sadistic Bourbons torture nine innocent Negro boys if the British flag flew over the South. Perhaps our Alexandria Advocate's reading has gotten no farther than Dickens; at any rate, it is quite evident he has never read of England's sanguinary acquisition of her many colonies. Nor does he recall that the same British flag which he would fly over the South flew over many of the slave traders that brought the Negroes to America.

Since Mr. Harrison has already admitted he knows something about "world affairs in general" it would hardly be worth while to point out the extent of England's rule over her colonies. To the contrary, it is quite obvious he has spent too much time with "world affairs" and not enough with the affairs of his own country.

Burke's Successor.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Permit me to request that your valuable paper protest the manner of choosing a successor to Inspector Burke. The policy of skipping so many faithful, deserving and efficient inspectors, captains and lieutenants on the eligible list should not be allowed.

Fairness and justice demands that seniority, experience, length of service and efficiency be not overlooked or ignored when the selection and appointment is made.

Women In Politics And Business.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Those who have traveled much in foreign lands are aware that while other countries are governed by men the United States is governed by women. Here the male creature has an inferior complex. The rugged manhood that made our Nation great no longer exists, or, at least, to a very limited extent. The Revolutionary War and the Civil War could not have been waged successfully with present day policies. This generation would probably not have undertaken the task in either case. True, our young men went into the World War, but mostly as conscripts. What a contrast between 1775 and 1861, and 1917!

The greed of capitalism in seeking cheap service and the ambition of certain women to ape men led to the woman suffrage movement and the entrance of women in large numbers in business and politics. Many good women have been taught to despise household duties and, instead, have entered upon men's work. What has been the result? An over supplied labor market, with millions of men idle and with little or no prospect of ever again finding steady employment. The women who have taken their places will continue to hold the jobs.

Moronic constituencies have likewise elected women to public office, to administer public affairs, and in few, if any, instances—say what you may—have women proved equal to the task, except in the matter of drawing compensation from the public treasury.

The constant talk about "recovery" is deceiving. A satisfactory business situation will never come under the present insane economic and political conditions. Not until woman returns—or is compelled to return—to her rightful and proper place, the home, will the economic situation right itself. This is the one thing, however, that the average politician and the professional political economist want to avoid.

The country is as deficient in able statesmanship as it is in a rugged manhood and a home-loving womanhood. At the present time we, as a Nation, are sinking deeper and deeper in debt, and this will doubtless continue until the source whence comes the money is dry and the taxpayers penniless. What will be the situation then? Let some one with prophetic vision foretell.

OBSERVER.
Washington, Feb. 1.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There were in the United States in 1930, according to the Census Bureau, 3,071,302 married women, 5,734,826 single and 1,826,100 divorced women gainfully employed.

According to the estimate of the American Federation of Labor for November, 1935, there were 11,672,187 men out of work.

Many girls, graduates of business, teachers' training and high schools, cannot obtain employment. As members of a family lose their positions they move together. In this manner many times a girl, if able to find employment, can keep a family together and out of the hands of charity. Married women, now holding positions, should be replaced by single men and women with responsibilities, married men and deserving widows.

The let-the-wife-also-take-a-job "racket" is one of the largest and best paying rackets of the present time. Assuming that these married women receive only $1,000 a year, there is paid to them annually the enormous sum of $3,071,302,000. Think of the happiness it would bring and the relief it would afford to overburdened charity organizations if only those who need this money were the recipients!

The Post Impressionist

Post Office, Tuesday.

DID you ever hear a physician praise the doctor of the drama? Was there ever a lawyer in real life with one kind word for the lawyer of stage or screen?

The answer is "No." Almost any man of any profession has too intimate a knowledge of his work and his fellow-workers to be satisfied by any such representation of it.

And the more fool he!

He simply misunderstands the purpose of the artist. At least, he misunderstands it when it touches his own job.

Let the medical and legal folk serve as an example:

Lawyers and doctors don't form the majority of the artist's audience and the artist is appealing to majorities. Whether creative or interpretive, he isn't trying to present a lawyer or doctor whom the lawyers and doctors will recognize. The artist's endeavor is to present a lawyer or a doctor as those creatures appear to their clients or patients—which is something very different indeed.

By Burns, the fellow's doing his damnest to show people as ithers see them! Of course, they don't like it. Who would? For his part, this columnist, being a newspaperman, is sure that, if ithers see newspapermen as newspapermen are represented on the screen, then ithers ought to consult an oculist. The only screen newspaperman who has ever behaved like a newspaperman is Stuart Erwin in that nerve-tearing melodrama "Exclusive Story."

There have been lifelike newspapermen in fiction, and lifelike newspaper-offices: not many, but a few. There was copy-boy Gallagher and his fellow-journalists whom Richard Harding Davis lifted out of the old Philadelphia Press. Jesse Lynch Williams got some of the genuine thing into "The Stolen Story," which was successful both in its short form and in its extension to novel-length.

Nevertheless, stage and screen seem to scare all reality out of newspapermen. Even the Williams' narrative lost its vitality under the glare of the footlights.

"The Fourth Estate" was written by an able newspaperman, but it wasn't played by actors with the typewriter touch. The acting of Sydney Shields was the sole merit in the performance of "The Fear-Market"—and her role was not that of a woman-journalist. If there are any newspapers or any reporters like those in "Front Page," the Post-Impressionist is a fortunate person; he has escaped association with them.

Pass on to the screen:

The average newspaperman depicted by the motion-picture is either the sort you momentarily expect to produce a notebook or the sort you are sure will steal the cigars.

On a certain transatlantic voyage we sat up all of one night talking about this to Charley MacArthur. The concord of the conversation was touching. There was even perfect agreement that, odd as it might seem to screen patrons, men who wrote for the daily papers were closely allied to the human race.

Then, shortly thereafter, Charley jauntily shouldered half the heavy responsibility for "Five Star Final!"

So it was a relief as well as a thrill ot see "Exclusive Story."

According to our able ally, Nelson Bell, who approves its smashing climax, its crimes are "sordid and sensational." Well, although we have ourselves always thought there was a good deal that is sordid and sensational about all crime, we gladly defer to Brother Bell's deeper, if not more intimate, knowledge of the subject.

Nevertheless, there at last, in "Exclusive Story," Stuart Erwin is a real reporter reported for the screen. Certain events may happen in his office which rarely happen in most newspaper-offices, but here they happen credibly. His professional deeds may be unusual, but his professional manner and his professional ethics are those of a decent journalist working for a decent journal. Mr. Erwin doesn't drink the champagne leftovers after covering a banquet. There is no danger of his speeding a sick man to the grave in order to catch a last edition, or hiding the body to get a beat.

With "Exclusive Story," however, we stop short. Mr. Erwin is such an exceptional exception that our prejudice against the newspaper-movie as a genre remains unshaken.

Generally speaking, when it comes to a movie dealing with newspapers and newspapermen, we prefer "So Red the Rose:"

It is as sentimental as Thomas Nelson Page.

Its history is as bad as Sabatini's.

Its chief dramatic incident has been used by Sardou, de Maupassant, Clyde Fitch and Whatshisname Potter: the man who wrote "The Conquerors."

But Margaret Sullavan plays the heroine—and there isn't one newspaper or newspaperman in it.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

The English Press.

London, Feb. 3.

ALTHOUGH our friends the English make an important point of loathing the vulgarity of the American press, there is comfort in the fact that the English papers having the greatest circulation are those which have attempted to imitate the gaudiest features of our journalism.

Notwithstanding the severity of the English libel law and the restrictions governing the coverage of crime, they have managed to achieve a rich yellow complexion and would be much yellower if they dared. It has not been many years since the English press was permitted to publish verbatim testimony in covering divorce trials, and did so with an enthusiasm which bespoke an eager public appetite for intimacies which, according to American standards, were much too foul for publication.

• • • •

THE London publishers pay better wages than Americans and the day of the cringing penny-a-liner or inkstained wretch of Fleet street has passed. A new aggressive crew has come along who does not approach government officials hat in hand but throw open the door and walk in with a confident "How do you do!" no different from that of the Washington correspondent who knows his way around.

When the new King was the Prince of Wales the English reporters of the better class acted as men in his presence, and his own respect for them as men undoubtedly assisted in the emancipation of that class who in other years were known somewhat contemptuously as pressmen. The continuance of this relation now that the Prince has become King will further enhance the prestige of the English reporter and dispel much of the flubdub with which up to now it has been customary to adorn references to the royal family.

The new King does not like photographers, because their duty makes it necessary for them to get in his hair, but he is very considerate at that, considering how many millions of times he has been photographed.

• • • •

ONCE when he was prince he called a photographer to him and was giving him hell for bothering him, when the photographer said:

"Look here, sir, can I speak to you as one man to another?"

"Go ahead," said the prince.

"All right," said the photographer. "Frankly, I'm sick of taking your picture, but I hafta do it because that's me job. One day you were opening a bloody 'ospital and I took your picture. Then when you were coming out what do you do? Why, you stoop down and shake 'ands with a little kiddy and I 'ad to be there to photograph that or I'd have been sacked. I'd rather've been 'ome, but you 'ave to go around shaking 'ands with a lotta little brats. Why do you shake 'ands with every little brat you see?

"Another time I found a little brat near another 'ospital and I went into a garden and stole a lot of flowers with me own 'ands. I then gave the flowers to the kiddy and gave 'er a shillin' to 'and them to you when you came out. But she took me shillin' and then got scared. So I didn't get me picture. And next day there was a story in the paper about a little kiddy that saved 'er pennies to buy some flowers for the prince, but got lost in the crowd and missed 'im. So then I got 'ell from my office because I missed the picture of the kiddy."

The prince laughed and relented, but photographers bother him, nevertheless. It's easy to understand, because even when his father lay dead both he and his mother though bowed with grief and worn almost to exhaustion by formal duties were photographed incessantly by those very papers which recently expressed most towering scorn for the sniping of the Lindbergh baby's picture and then ran it themselves.

Home Urged Here For Stranded Girls

Establishment of a home at which stranded girls of the "white collar class" could receive temporary housing and necessities, was decided upon yesterday by the annual meeting of the advisory board of the Volunteers of America.

The board acted after receiving a report from Lieut. Maj. H. Mills Eroh, of a survey which showed the need for such an institution.

Dr. Edith SeVille Coale was elected to the chairmanship of the board, succeeding the late Edward T. Clark. The board adopted resolutions of regret at the death of Mr. Clark.

Syrian College Closed After Anti-French Riot

Damascus, Syria, Feb. 3 (AP).—Police closed the Syrian University today, after students rioted in a recurrence of disorders over a French campaign to suppress the Nationalistic political bloc. Communist students allegedly broke windows and started the disorders.

Damascus was filled with troops two weeks ago, after street-fighting in which two French soldiers were wounded. Two days later four persons died in fresh outbreaks. French authorities had raided the closed offices of the Nationalistic bloc in Damascus and Aleppo and exiled its leader, Fakray Baroudi.

U. S. Citizen to Be Tried For Treason in Munich

Munich, Germany, Feb. 3 (AP).—Charles Niffelbeck, 36-year-old naturalized United States citizen, today was ordered brought to trial February 17 before the regular Munich court.

He was arrested in May, 1935, and has been held in jail ever since on charges of "treasonable activity" and the smuggling of foreign currency.

Niffelbeck was said to be a resident of New York.

Geneva Studies Our Neutrality

Revisions In Theory Have Been Brought By New Treaties.

By Bertram Pickard.

Geneva.

THERE are some in Geneva who heartily reciprocate the distrust felt and expressed for the League of Nations by important elements of public opinion in the United States. There are others—amongst whom the present writer counts himself—who take history as they find it. Objective observers, remembering that the American and European continents, though far distant, are nevertheless integral parts of a steadily shrinking world, are interested to study the reasons for differences, the better to understand and promote potential solidarity.

It is in this spirit that one ventures to examine the present significant developments in the theory and practice of neutrality by the United States in relation to the League of Nations and its covenant.

• • • •

The experience of the war and the novelty of such post-war instruments as the League of Nations Covenant and the Kellogg-Briand Pact have produced a revolutionary change in the common attitude to legal and moral conceptions of neutrality, if contemporary standards be measured against those of 1914. To speak, therefore, of the "old" neutrality and the "new" neutrality is as justified as it is convenient.

The "old" neutrality has been decorously defined as "the effort to maintain impartiality in official relations to the belligerents, while allowing private trade in arms and other material to continue, subject only to certain rights of maritime capture." The private trader under this system was much less decorously denounced recently as "the old-fashioned neutral who flourished and waxed fat by supplying belligerents with the wherewithal for killing each other."

This sentiment, before the war, held consciously by a relatively small number of people, today is cordially indorsed by millions of men and women on both sides of the Atlantic. The similarity of policy lies in the discouragement of belligerency by the withholding of sinews of war, not only on the part of States but private traders as well. The divergency arises from the fact that whereas American policy appears, at present, to be directed to the withholding of supplies from all belligerents, the doctrine of the League assumes that, while pressure should be exerted against a state that resorts to war in disregard of its covenants, the 'victim' of such 'aggression' should be supported diplomatically, and perhaps even assisted materially.

It would scarcely be contested by the League's harshest critic that, on paper, the logic of the Covenant is irrefutable. If war is outlawed and then one state attacks another in violation of the law, it is fantastic that the criminal and the victim of his crime should be treated on an equal footing. Of course, it is not really as simple as that. Logic becomes complicated by history, geography, grave existing injustices and the very rudimentary sense of international solidarity available to make any collective system work.

Traditional habits of mind and those 3,000 miles of water leave the people of the United States less ready to consider common action against "aggression" than the people of the British Isles. They, in their turn, are less preoccupied with "security" than the peoples of many European countries, yet Geneva notes with great interest the many American converts to the idea of discriminatory, as opposed to equal, action when an "aggressor" and a "victim of aggression" have been declared.

It appears significant here that both the present Administration and its predecessor, despite political differences, have shown a marked tendency to favor discrimination. There was, for example, the so-called "Stimson Doctrine" concerning nonrecognition of territorial changes or other situations brought about in violation of Kellogg Pact principles. Again, one of the most striking contributions made by the American delegation at the Disarmament Conference was the enunciation by Mr. Norman Davis in May, 1933, of what was popularly styled the Davis Doctrine:

"In the event that the states in conference determine that a state has been guilty of a breach of the peace in violation of international obligation, and take measures against the violator, then, if we concur in the judgment rendered as to the responsible and guilty party, we will refrain from any action tending to defeat such collective efforts which these states may thus make to restore peace."

As a matter of fact this proposal was made contingent upon a disarmament convention being worked out. Nevertheless, it marked a tendency in official policy which would now appear to be abandoned with reluctance by the Executive under pressure from Congress.

• • • •

But, although majority opinion in the United States is seen as opposed to participation in any collective attempt to restrain aggression, Geneva does not fail to note that the old neutrality has gone by the board. If American public opinion is unwilling to discriminate as between belligerents, there appears to be small wish, at present, to retain those "neutral rights" which were of the very essence of the classic American doctrine of the "Freedom of the Seas" and one of the chief foundations of American naval and national policy until very recently.

This was what Mr. Stimson meant, presumably, when during the meeting of the American Society of International Law last April he remarked that "when we say that the great mass of our people wish to remain neutral, speaking with exactness we do not mean that at all. We only mean that they wish to keep out of war—which is a very different thing."

It would seem that this is the dominant motive behind the current neutrality legislation and policy. At any rate Geneva notes a marked tendency in the debates to substitute for phrases referring to the discouragement of war other phrases emphasizing the motive of keeping out of war. On the other hand, knowing the wide and deep sentiment in the United States which favored the "outlawry of war" movement, Geneva suspects that side by side with the demand for "insulation" against the risks of war goes a moral determination that the United States shall not be used again as arsenal in chief by any belligerent or belligerents. Exactly how these motives are mixed is important, but secondary to the outstanding fact that the "old" neutrality has given place to the "new."

• • • •

What does this signify for the League of Nations system of war prevention and restraint? Whatever the intentions, the effects of the new policy upon the League's development may be revolutionary.

Diverging Viewpoints Raise Issues For World Peace.

Sir Normal Angell, whose knowledge of American politics and opinion, as well as of the League, is considerable, goes to the heart of the matter in a letter appearing in the London Times of January 8. He says:

The one fact which overpowers all else in this matter is that the rights of neutral trade embodied in the old American conception of "the freedom of the seas," which has been the cause of one war between Great Britain and the United States and so nearly of further wars, is now for good and all swept away, surrendered.

He does not overlook the fact that coupled with substantial abandonment of the "freedom of the seas" doctrine "is the decision to permit traders at their own risk to sell normal peace-time supplies to both belligerents, without distinction."

But, even in the event of League belligerency (i. e. military sanctions), he points out that, so long as the League powers commanded the sea the upshot would be that, whilst normal peace-time supplies would continue to reach 52 states, or most of them—supplies to the aggressor would be stopped without fear of complications with the United States Government.

It has to be admitted, however, that to apply penalties (i. e. refusal to supply war materials) to League states engaged in upholding the law of nations is not easily reconcilable with the spirit and letter of the Kellogg-Briand Pact, quite apart from the Covenant.

• • • •

To relate, in conclusion, these more general comments to the present Italo-Abyssinian conflict, and the League's collective efforts at intervention there, it is clear that the action of the United States, though in theory treating the two belligerents (aggressor and victim) on an equal footing, has in practice operated in Italy's disfavor. The Journal des Nations (a Geneva daily of strong pro-sanctionist views) wrote last November: "The attitude of President Roosevelt has been excellent, and has greatly facilitated the task of the League."

This is obviously true, and one has a shrewd suspicion that this undiscriminatory policy, which results in discriminatory effects, has been nicely calculated.

Nevertheless, Geneva is under no delusion as to the strength of the current running against positive cooperation with the League. It believes that the policies of Washington and Geneva will run on different lines—lines which will tend to converge, however, with every successful effort of the League to stop aggressive war, and to secure the adjustments between nations necessary to assure approximate justice and peace.

• • • •

One question remains, which Washington, as well as Geneva, must try to answer, for the issue of peace and war hangs on it: Can the League powers, with only that measure of American co-operation possible under the "new neutrality," exercise sufficient authority in the affairs of the world to construct an edifice of law and equity strong enough to withstand the shocks of national and imperial rivalries which at present bid fair to destroy such precarious foundations as now exist?

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The Jungle Goes Sissy.

This department saw the latest African jungle movie the other day and begs leave to report that the animals have gone Hollywood. As one correspondent put it, the ham in them is coming out.

• • • •

The tigers seemed to be insisting that their profiles be taken exclusively and a black panther was clearly looking for autograph hunters.

• • • •

The so-called wild beasts of the impenetrable jungle have become actors with studio attachments, and they know it. Lions wait for their bows, tigers strive to wow their audiences and gorillas carry stooges and wait for musical cues.

• • • •

It wouldn't surprise us any day now to see a flock of lions advertising themselves in "Variety" as the Nubian Sextette.

• • • •

There was a time when an African hunt picture made you leap out of your chair. The beasts were unmistakably ferocious. And you could tell that they were disturbed by prowling white men with gun and camera.

• • • •

They even snarled without rehearsals.

• • • •

But there came a day when there were almost as many photographers as there were beasts in the jungle. The animals got used to it. For the past few years the only time a lion looked really wild was when he hadn't had his picture taken for a week or more.

• • • •

The newest African movies indicate that when a cameraman invades darkest Africa all he is doing is meeting some old-time performers.

• • • •

In the animal picture we saw recently the wild beasts didn't come on until they had the proper lighting effects. They did their best in a pale green glow. A trap was built for a tiger and he walked right into it while the camera clicked. He thought it was just another neighborhood nicolet.

• • • •

In another scene a very handsome and decidedly self-conscious lion chased a native into his house, gave him plenty of time to jump out of a window and then staged a pursuit in which he followed the script rather than the fleeing man. The animal even allowed time for cut-backs, close-ups and changes in synopsis.

• • • •

• • • •

• • • •

• • • •

Labor's Drama

By Karl Schriftgiesser.

John Lewis' Triumph

HUNDREDS of persons yesterday trudged up the slippery steps of the Supreme Court Building, seeking drama, and hundreds walked down again in the damp day with disappointment on their faces. But those who sat through the dreary lenghts of William Green's plea to the miners in Constitution Hall saw in action the greatest actor in the United States today.

I mean none other than John Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America. He arose to Olympian heights yesterday, when with words whose very brevity was scorching, he let the miners read William Green out of the union to which he has always belonged. For that is what happened. Never in his long career as a leader of labor had William Green shouted so loud for leadership. And never had the answering boos come forth with such a din. And never had the ensuing silence been so deep.

It was with consummate skill that the great playwright and actor, with the shaggy mane of a too-husky Hamlet, let the words of his enemy do what he had never before quite been willing to do. A great orator, who pounds words until they flash before his listeners like gunpowder, who pauses and stops and glares, and pounds again, Lewis has led his men before this. But yesterday in Constitution Hall he did not pound his words. He did not pause. He only glared. And then, with two brief sentences, he led the lamb to the slaughter.

• • • •

IT is always sad to see a man go down to defeat. It was sad to watch William Green stand there, talking, talking, talking himself into defeat. Once, now and then, the miners clapped their hands. Once they booed him in anger. At the end of his long discourse, through which they had mostly sat in the silence of disagreement, they allowed themselves the relaxation of brief applause. Once or twice—especially when he picked on the moot question of the election of officers by districts—he touched upon the weakness of the industrial unionists. But he talked on—no dramatist—no director—no actor, for more than an hour and a half.

And then came the great scene. Seldom has John Lewis done as well. Mopping his red face, the stout, brown-suited A. F. of L. president sat down. Cool, belligerent, shaking his mane like a stallion, Lewis charged on the stage. He faced his men—and they were his men. He lifted his lined face—next to Borah's, the strongest face in Washington—and slowly opened his mouth. But there was no speech. That was where he scored his greatest point of the day. He merely glared at his men. And they looked expectantly back. And he said that if anyone had had his mind changed by Green's speech, let him stand up.

• • • •

THERE are moments in plays when you lean forward in your seat. That is what I did, gripping the arms of the chair. For John Lewis was magnificent at that moment, glaring down with the full light of the movie men's flares upon his lined face. There, you said, was a leader. There was a strong man. And when he was finished with his few words, three men stood up.

Lewis tossed his mane. He stood there, feet planted firmly—and then he turned and looked with moving compassion at the man who had spoken in vain.

And then, piling thrill upon thrill, he repeated himself. And then he shot forth these words: "Let any man who defies the ultimatum of President Green stand up!" And only three men were sitting in that packed hall.

And then he turned again, slowly, majestically, toward the man who had talked too long, and said: "There's your answer."

• • • •

THAT was all. William Green sat there, mopping his red face. He was smiling slightly when Lewis sat down to lean toward him and talk. Cameramen turned their cameras at the two. Lewis waved them away. Lewis looked sadder than the pudgy man in brown. "Why didn't you tell me what you were going to say, Bill?" he asked. I did not hear the answer. It did not matter.

A great play had been acted. Perhaps it was a great tragedy. But though the audience outside shouted, and a band played, they were calling for the man with the shaggy mane, it was all over. The curtain was down.

William Green got up to go from the stage. He looked weary. Some newspapermen crowded around him. He said he had nothing to say. But he lifted his hand and on his finger was a silver ring. It looked like a horseshoe.

"The boys of this union gave me this ten years ago," he said. "And I have never taken it off a single time since then."

He put his hand in his pocket and walked from the stage. He was still wearing the ring. And perhaps that was the most significant gesture of an afternoon that was packed with drama and directed by a genius.

Plenty of Adventure in Police Work, Says Former Soldier.

"Gen. MacBrian, with a small party of men, pushed into the village of Givenchy "(on the Vimy Ridge Front, April 13, 1916) and found that only a few snipers were left among the ruins. One of the snipers shot the general, but not dangerously."

Such is a day-page from the life of Sir James MacBrian, commissioner of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, and former soldier. The above quotation from the Times History of the World War fits the man more completely than any glowing account could.

Quiet and reserved, there is the carriage of a soldier in his every gesture. He served with distinction throughout the South African War, and in the World War, saw four years of service on the Western front. In a matter-of-fact voice, he outlined the work of his force at the Mayflower yesterday.

"There's more adventure in mounted police life than almost any other work I know," he began. "Before men can be sent up there they have to prove themselves fit in all ways. The first test comes in enlisting, where we pick about 300 men from 5,000 applicants."

And for the small boy who wants to become a policeman, particularly a "Mountie," Sir James had another discouragement. Acceptance of an applicant, he said, is only the first step. Next comes a long period of training.

"No man is sent out on any real job until he has had a year's training. He then serves in the company of an older man. If at the end of that time he has shown his worth, he is sent out on assignments alone."

Then, at last, there may be real adventure in sight. The force maintains posts as far north as within 700 miles of the pole. Men are sent up there for tours of duty that may last over a year, he said.

"In those remote posts, the mounted police have absolute authority. They represent both the civil and the criminal law. They collect taxes, do game preservation work and act as justices of the peace.

"Some of the provinces can be patrolled by airplane, but in the northwestern part of Canada the country is still too rough and we have to travel by boat in summer and by dog-sledge in winter."

Sir James' interest in game conservation brought him to Washington, where President Roosevelt has called a conference on wild life conservation problems. Yesterday he found time for a call on J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

"I want to see how we can work together on our mutual problems," he said.

Court Delays TVA Rule

Among those who had crammed their way into the courtroom to hear a decision that was not made were Solicitor General Stanley Reed and Mrs. Reed; David Lilienthal, of the TVA board; James Lawrence Fly, of TVA counsel; Angus McLean, special assistant to the Attorney General, and Representative John E. Rankin (Democrat), of Mississippi, House champion of TVA policies. Wives of a number of the justices were present.

Arguments on Bankhead cotton law validity, challenged by Gov. Eugene Talmadge, and his State of Georgia, were slated to go forward today, despite President Roosevelt's message to Congress requesting repeal not only of the Bankhead act, but the potato and tobacco control laws as well.

Dismissal Move Attacked.

The Government recently moved to dismiss the Georgia suit, and arguments will be on the Government's motion. Georgia's attorney general, M. J. Yeomans, yesterday filed a brief attacking the Government's dismissal motion.

The railroad tax decision, in which majority of the court cited securities and property value declines during the depressions, "to find in favor of the Great Northern Railway Co., was read by Justice Pierce Butler, a former railroad attorney.

Justices Hughes, Roberts, Van Devanter, Sutherland and McReynolds voted with him, but a dissenting opinion was read by Stone, representing his own views and those of Justice Brandeis and Cardozo.

The railway had sued in the lower courts for an injunction against collection of 1933 taxes based on an assessment it claimed to be "excessive and arbitrary." The railroad has paid about 60 per cent of the total $1,508,352 tax.

Decline in Values Noted.

"Judicial notice must be taken of the fact that late in 1929 there occurred a great collapse of values of all classes of property—railroads, other utilities, commodities and securities, and that the depression then commenced progressively became greater," Butler said in his majority opinion.

"In making assessments in that period the board was bound to take into account and give due weight to the sudden, progressive and enormous declines of value.

Butler said a $78,832,888 1933 valuation on the road's properties was "arbitrarily adopted"—that if it had been based on assessment principles governing in 1932 and preceding years it would have been about $13,000,000 less than the amount fixed.

Justice Stone, leading the same so-called "liberal" minority which dissented from the court's AAA invalidation, declared it "a matter of concern" that the court for the first time "is setting aside a tax as a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment on the ground that the assessment on which it is computed is too high, without any showing that the assessment is discriminatory or that petitioner is in any way bearing an undue share of the tax burden imposed on all property owners in the State."

The Supreme Court's ruling that preferred stock acquired by the RFC in rehabilitating closed banks is subject to State taxation directly involved $1,000,000 of stock in the Baltimore National Bank.

RFC an Instrument.

The court decided that "if the consent of the United States has removed the barriers or lowered them," the stock could be taxed, even if the RFC is an instrumentality of Government.

"We think consent has been so given where shares in a national bank are the property to be taxed, though an agency of the Government is the owner of the assets subjected to the burden," the court said, pointing out that all shares of a national banking association are subject to taxation by the State in which it maintains its principal place of business.

Owners of stock in four of the associations had challenged provisions of the law as "an arbitrary redistribution of wealth." Yesterday's ruling held the constitutional rights of stockholders were invaded by a law changing the right of preferred payment.

The Supreme Court's recent AAA invalidation would not have been possible under a bill introduced yesterday by Senator Pope (Democrat), Idaho, requiring a vote of at least seven of the nine justices to hold a law unconstitutional.

Pope said he opposed placing "this Nation under the absolute rule of nine men, however wise, where rules are grounded on nothing more firm than majority opinion."

36,760 Quit CCC in '35 To Take Private Jobs

Robert Fechner, director of the Civilian Conservation Corps, said in a report published yesterday that the number of men leaving the corps to take private jobs in 1935 showed a 36,760 increase over the preceding year.

Sale of Power Partial Failure, TVA Reports

Agency Gives Personnel, Salary Lists Asked by Its Critics.

By the Associated Press.

The Tennessee Valley Authority reported to Congress yesterday its efforts to dispose of surplus power generated at the gigantic development "have been only partially successful, due to strenuous opposition by many interests."

The agency's report, covering operations for the fiscal year ended June 30, came as the Supreme Court passed another decision day without ruling on the constitutional challenge of the TVA. Echoing some of the arguments already made for the agency, the report contended:

"Existing privately owned utilities have been given every consideration consistent with the authority's paramount public obligations. No duplicating or competitive facilities have been erected by the Authority."

At another point the report said the "work of the Tennessee Valley Authority revolves around critical national problems, concerned with the basic resources upon which the well being of the entire country depends."

The financial statement showed a net investment in programs of $48,487,528 and total assets of $78,340,604.

The report carried a personnel and salary section which was not ordered printed when the report was first made. TVA critics, including Representatives McLean (Republican), New Jersey, and May (Democrat), Kentucky, had protested the absence of this information, contending efforts were being made to suppress the salaries above $1,500.

"We should have had the report in December ready for Congress when we convened January 3, and not in February," said McLean, "but since we have accomplished our purpose in the report at hand, I do not plan to press for an explanation at this time.

McLean indicated, however, he would have something to say about the report after he has had more opportunity to study it.

May, not appeased by the salary list, threatened to send a copy of the salary list by registered mail to Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes.

The report shows 4,046 employes of the TVA as of June 30, 1935. Of this total, 1,757 received $1,440 or less annually, and 2,289 received $1,620 or more annually.

The agency said that "it has often represented to Congress that existing supplies of electricity in the Tennessee Valley region are of such magnitude in relation to existing demand as to make the power available at navigation and flood-control dams of the Tennessee Valley Authority unmarketable." Of this, the report contended that the Authority, with limited and temporary exceptions, is not engaged in the distribution of electricity to the ultimate consumer.

"The electric rates established by contractors who purchase power from the Authority are substantially lower than the average rates throughout the United States," the report said.

The report added the Authority has devoted special attention to problems of rural electrification and by the close of the fiscal year 200 miles of rural electric line had been built and 181 additional miles were in the process of construction.

No more romantic and colorful country can be imagined than Japan, the land of the cherry blossom, whose fairy-like beauty is attracting more and more visitors each year. In describing his native land to Washington travel lovers, Mr. Miyakawa uses pictures and colored slides of unusual beauty, and he tells many interesting bits of Japan's amazing history and her stupendous strides in becoming one of the most important industrial countries in the world. Warm Climates Draw Socialites of Capital

Secretary Roper Leaves for Florida; the Leiters to Visit Aiken; Mrs. Barkley and Daughter Sail for Panama; Mr., Mrs. Doeller Off for Palm Beach.

By Dudley Harmon.

This is the time of year when even cities as gay as the Capital begin to feel a touch of midwinter doldrums. Entertaining falls off, heating systems go awry, and ice and snow, amusing at first, become something of a bore.

Many members of Washington society have already left town for warmer and sunnier places. Palm Beach, Miami, and Panama are among the locales which great numbers of Washingtonians are visiting. One civilization-weary group is even contemplating complete retirement into a cabin on the Virgin Islands.

The Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Daniel Roper, left Saturday for two weeks of rest and relaxation on the west coast of Florida. The Leiter family—Mrs. Leiter, Miss Nancy Leiter and Mr. Thomas Leiter—are also in Florida. They will return to Washington on the 16th and will be off again on the 25th for their home in Aiken.

Mrs. Alben W. Barkley, wife of Senator Barkley, sailed Saturday with her daughter, Mrs. Max Truitt, for Panama. During their trip, Mrs. Barkley and Mrs. Truitt will visit Jamaica, Colombia, Panama and Havana.

Mrs. Coolidge to Visit.

Mr. and Mrs. William Doeller are visiting Mrs. Frank Gould, at the latter's home in Palm Beach, until next week. Mrs. T. Jefferson Coolidge, wife of the retiring Undersecretary of the Treasury, will leave for the same resort about the first of March, to visit friends there.

Also in Florida is Mrs. Delos A. Blodgett, who has as her house guests at her Miami Beach home Gen. and Mrs. Frederick Coleman, and Mr. S. H. Peck, of Washington. Mrs. Thomas W. Phillips, jr., is at her home on Hibiscus Island, and has as her house guest, Mrs. Albert Schmid, of Paris.

Mr. and Mrs. John Arthur Hinckley sailed last week for Bermuda, where they will spend several weeks, before returning to the house in Warrenton which they have leased until the home they are having built nearby is completed. On the same boat were Mr. Edward Gardner and his niece, Miss Mary Louise Marsh. After a few weeks in Nassau, they will go to Palm Beach for a stay. Also planning a trip to Nassau are Mr. and Mrs. Lee Warren, who will leave Friday to visit Mr. and Mrs. F. Lammot Belin there.

Party in Tucson.

Miss Martha Davidge will leave on the 20th for Tucson, Ariz., with her mother, Mrs. John Davidge. Miss Mary McDowell, daughter of Mrs. Ralph McDowell, who has just recuperated from a fall from a horse, has nevertheless left for a ranch near Tucson for some more riding. Mrs. William A. Scully is also in the party, accompanied by her daughter, Miss Kate Hyde Scully.

Mrs. McKenney Mallan is planning a trip to Florida in the near future, with her sister and brother-in-law, Commander and Mrs. Arthur Wallace Dunn, who are coming to Washington in a few days from New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Merle Thorpe have left their home on Rockville pike, to spend two weeks at the Breakers Hotel, Palm Beach. Mr. Clarence Hewes is in Palm Beach at the moment, but will soon go to New Orleans to visit with his sister and brother-in-law there.

New Orleans Bound.

Also New Orleans-bound in the near future are Miss Phyllis Thompson, Miss Betty Hardie, and Miss Mary Cowles. They will leave on the 21st to visit Miss Hardie's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Bardie, of New Orleans.

While in New Orleans, the three will attend the Mardi Gras festivities. On Shrove Tuesday, which is the day when everyone dances in the streets in mask and costume, Miss Hardie and her friends will attend a breakfast given annually by a club of young men, who go by the intriguing name of the Bourbon Street Bounders.

That same evening, Miss Hardie, Miss Thompson and Miss Cowles will attend the famous Comus masked ball, at which Miss Hardie was crowned queen several years ago. Miss Hardie will go as a gypsy, and Miss Cowles as a Salzburg peasant.

Mrs. Daniels Will Entertain Miss Brainerd

Will Give Tea on Friday for Latin-American Expert on Eve of Trip.

Mrs. Worth Daniels, daughter-in-law of the Ambassador to Mexico, Mr. Josephus Daniels, will entertain at a tea on Friday afternoon in honor of Miss Heloise Brainerd, former chief of the division of intellectual co-operation of the Pan-American Union.

Miss Brainerd, who is now chairman of the Latin-American committee for the people's mandate to governments to end war, will sail next week for Mexico to start an active drive in that country and the Central American republics in connection with the world campaign to obtain 50,000,000 signatures to the mandate.

The Ambassador of Mexico, Senor Don Francisco Castillo Najera, one of the signers of the mandate, will also be a guest and will make a brief address, as will Dr. James Brown Scott. Invitations to the tea have been sent to the diplomats of all the countries which Miss Brainerd will visit on her three months' tour, as well as to the heads of the Mexican and Latin-American divisions of the State Department. The Minister of Panama, Senor Dr. Ricardo J. Alfaro, and the Charge d'Affaires of Nicaragua, Senor Dr. Don Henri De Bayle, will be among the guests.

Women Planning To Renew Sewing

Activity Will Be Revived Every Friday.

Agroup of Army ladies will renew their sewing activities at the District of Columbia Chapter, American Red Cross, 1730 E street northwest, on Friday at 10 a. m., and will continue their services every Friday thereafter. Mrs. Walter L. Reed, wife of Maj. Gen. Reed, inspector general of the Army, will act as chairman of the group.

For some years the Navy-Marine Unit, under the leadership of Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, has given a day of service each week to the Red Cross in the sewing and surgical dressings departments. More than 40 members serve in this unit and 1,000 or more dressings and other articles are produced at each meeting. Through a special arrangement this group works exclusively for the Episcopal Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital.

The Army Unit also will be assigned a special task for its first work—that of supplying garments for needy little children who are patients at the Glenn Dale Tuberculosis Sanatorium.

WAS IT MURDER?

By JAMES HILTON

Colin Revell, young writer, visits Oakington, his old school to help solve the mystery surrounding the deaths of Robert Marshall and his older brother Wilbraham. Robert was killed by a falling gas fixture. Wilbraham was found dead at the bottom of the empty swimming tank. A bullet was later found in his brain. Robert Roseveare, headmaster of the school, suggests this death may have been a suicide, made to seem accidental by some one for the sake of the school and family. But Revell and Guthrie, Scotland Yard detective, do not accept this theory. They suspect Ellington, cousin of the boys, Robert's housemaster, and heir to the Marshall fortune. Ellington admits that his revolver and cricket bat are missing. Then one morning, Lambourne, another one of the schoolmasters, is found dead in bed. Roseveare says Mrs. Ellington was with Lambourne at 10 the night before.

CHAPTER XX.

GUTHRIE turned to Revell. "Can't help rather liking the fellow, can you? Such dignity—such pride—such a marvelous way of quibbling all around the question!"

"You seemed pretty doubtful about him?"

"Did I? Oh, I think it was all fairly plausible. But we must have a little chat with the Lady with the Lamp, of course. And by Jove—here she is!" This final exclamation was whispered, for Mrs. Ellington was hastening toward them along the corridor. She was ashen pale and her eyes showed signs of recent weeping, but there was a calm eagerness in her voice as she addressed Guthrie. "I've been looking for you," she began, abruptly. "I want to see you—to speak to you. It is most important. Will you—both of you—come up to my husband's room just above?"

"Certainly, Mrs. Ellington, if you wish."

"There now," Guthrie said, as he settled himself in the easy chair opposite hers. "We shan't be disturbed here and you can tell me anything you like."

"I feel I must tell you," she said agitatedly. "I hate doing so—but I think it is only fair to so many others. It has all been so frightful for everybody here lately—so much doubt and suspicion . . ." She nearly broke down, but managed to save herself by a last effort. "Do you know, when I heard that Mr. Lambourne had died during the night, I was glad?"

"You were?" I suppose it was because you think Lambourne's guilty?"

Revell started in astonishment, but a slight glance from Guthrie quelled him. Mrs. Ellington slowly nodded. "I not only think he is," she said. "I know it. It was he who killed Wilbraham Marshall. And Robert as well. He told me."

She gathered courage now that her secret was out. "Yes. He told me last night. He was terribly ill—ill in mind, I mean—and I tried to comfort him. He thought you were on his track and he felt he must tell somebody about it. I believe I told him he must confess to you—and he said he would in the morning. He said—they were almost his last words—'I'll tell Guthrie tomorrow.' Then he went to sleep and I left him."

It was Revell who first spoke. "But, Mrs. Ellington," he exclaimed, "why on earth should Lambourne have done it?"

She shook her head despairingly. "I know—that was just the question I kept on asking him. And his reasons were so strange. He said he hadn't meant to kill the boy at all in the first place—it was my husband he wanted to kill. And he thought my husband would have been sleeping in the dormitory that night."

Infatuation Disclosed.

"Yes, I understand how that could have arisen. Go on, please," interposed Guthrie.

She smiled a wan half-smile. "It was because of me, she said. You see, Mr. Lambourne and I have always been friendly—we have tastes in common—books, plays, music and so on. And because my husband doesn't care for such things, Mr. Lambourne imagined I was unhappy. But he had nothing to hope for from me—I mean—there was nothing whatever between us."

"The trouble is, of course, that some men don't need encouragement. Anyhow, what about the second murder?"

"I'm coming to that. He said that when he found out that the person in the dormitory bed was the boy and not my husband, he was at first overwhelmed with remorse. Then—so he said—his hatred of my husband grew in him until it gave him no rest at all. And the plan that came into his head was—briefly—to murder the other brother so that suspicion should fall on the man he hated. He reasoned that no one could have any apparent motive for murdering the two boys except my husband (who inherited their money, as you know) and that two such suspicious accidents would undoubtedly cause inquiries to be made."

"Did he give any details as to how each of the murders was done?"

"Yes, he told me everything. The first one was done by letting the gas pipe drop down on to the bed. He had previously loosened it."

"Yes. And the second murder?"

Lambourne's Acts Told.

"He went to my husband's room one day when he was out and took away his revolver and cartridges. He knew that the boy used to take a swim in the evenings during the hot weather. On that particular night he went down to the swimming-bath himself. He found the boy already there, cursing his luck because the water had been drawn out. Mr. Lambourne chatted with the boy for a time, gradually leading him along the edge of the bath as far as the diving platforms. He waited until the boy was standing on the edge facing the empty bath with the platforms just above him; then he sprang back suddenly, whipped out the revolver and shot up at the boy from behind." She trembled as she spoke the words. "Oh, he must have been out of his mind to do such a thing—he must have been. Don't you think so, Mr. Guthrie?"

"Very possibly, Mrs. Ellington. Most murderers, at the moment of murder, must be very near the border line of insanity. And I suppose, after shooting the boy, he staged the affair to look like an accident?"

"Yes. He took off the boy's wrist watch that he was wearing and climbed up to the top diving platform with it. He . . . Oh it's too terrible—he went down into the bath and hit the boy over the head—but the boy was already dead——"

"Did he tell you what he hit the boy with?"

She looked dazed. "No—or at least he may have done, but I don't remember."

"Yes, of course. After that, I suppose, he just went back to his room and to bed?"

"No—he was flurried and took a walk to calm himself. My husband can vouch for that because they met. My husband was having a stroll before going to bed."

"Yes, I think I know about that."

He paused thoughtfully and added: "Perhaps, Mrs. Ellington, as you knew Lambourne rather well, you can tell us a little more about him."

She responded eagerly, as if relieved to talk of less tragic matters. "He was a charming man, Mr. Guthrie. He was very badly hurt in the war—that's what began the trouble, I dare say. He had the most awful pains in his head, and sometimes deep depression would come over him like a cloud. He told me once that he hadn't had more than a dozen happy moments during the whole of the past ten years—and all the dozen, he said, had been when he was with me. Then his heart went wrong and he was told by the doctors that he might drop dead at any moment. Do you wonder I pitied him?"

"Not at all. Now don't distress yourself, Mrs. Ellington"—she had begun to cry softly—"you have really done all that you could possibly do, I think. There's only one thing I want to ask you—and that is, not to mention to anyone else what you have just told us. Have you told anyone so far?"

"No. Not even my husband. He would have—have misunderstood how—how Mr. Lambourne could have come to be so confidential with me."

"Ah yes, I understand. Well, remember, now—not a word to anyone. Goodby for the time being and once again—many thanks."

"Whew!" exclaimed Guthrie, after she had gone. "That puts the lid on it, doesn't it? Revell, without asking me any questions (though I know you are bursting to), will you kindly go downstairs and make an appointment for me to see Dr. Roseveare as soon as possible?"

Revell obeyed. There was really nothing else to be done.

Care of Lashes Lends Beauty To Most Eyes

Liquid Mascara Easy to Apply, Darkens in Natural Way.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

BEAUTY writers who claim that every woman can have beautiful eyes go too far. It is true, though, that all eyes can be improved 100 per cent with just a mite of attention. The lashes alone make worlds of difference. If they are thin and colorless, the eyes, no matter how large and sparkling, lack personality. On the other hand, some women are so careless about the way they use a darkener that they give a harsh, hard look to the eyes.

It's necessary, first of all, to use just enough mascara to make the lashes darker in a natural manner. Next, one must use a good mascara. One of the best we know about, and certainly one of easiest to apply, is a liquid. You apply it with a small soft brush that doesn't coat the lashes. Once on, it stays and stays. You can depend on that!

It comes in four shades—light brown, dark brown, blue and black.

Collapsible Coat Hangers.

WELL, who would have thought it? This is surprising! Have you seen them yet? Those collapsible metal coat hangers packed neatly in a black leather folder.

According to the girl behind the counter there's quite a demand for the hangers. Travelers in particular buy them so that wherever they go, and no matter how rustic conditions, they can have hangers available.

After all, they're certainly no trouble to pack. Opened out they are fairly large hangers, but collapsed they're scarcely bigger than a minute.

And Dainty Negligees.

Speaking eloquently of spring are the dainty negligees selling for $5.95 in an F street store. There are prints in lovely colors of dusty rose and blue and ceil; tailored crepes in aqua, navy, black and Dubonnet; celanese taffeta in turquoise and French blue, and Jacquard models in coral, rose and blue.

The negligees are bias cut and tailored straight models, surplice styles, puff sleeves and whatnot. They range in size from petite 14 to 44.

Real bargains, every one of them!

Like Filigree Jewelry?

As dainty as dainty can be, and feminine to the nth degree is the fine filigree jewelry displayed in a downtown store. It comes in gold or silver—to suit any costume. There are clips, belt buckles, necklaces and bracelets. You'll find it hard to believe they cost only $1 each.

A Real Nail Groomer.

Twenty-five cents will buy you one of the best little nail groomers you ever saw. It's a composition stick with one end rounded and flattened so that it's just right for keeping the cuticle pushed back and in perfect shape. At the other end is a small cluster of stiff bristles which are incomparable for cleaning the nails. Many people prefer these to metal points because they work thoroughly and safely.

About Large Sizes.

Out of luck nothing! We know of a downtown store that caters to women of unusual size. So much so, in fact, that right at present they are launching a sale of silk gowns and slips for $1.95, and not a gown or slip in the bunch that isn't cut for Madame Overweight. They are cut on the bias to assure a smooth fit and are trimmed with lovely laces, ruffles, hemstitched and flares.

The gowns come in tea rose and blue, sizes 18, 19 and 20. The slips are tea rose, sizes 46 to 52.

Original 'First Lady' Declared Kin of French

By the Associated Press

PARIS.—Martha Washington was of French origin, believes Jean de Pavilly, a research expert on Franco-American families.

Pavilly says Martha Washington was the grandmother of Orlando Jones and Martha Macon, the latter being the daughter of Gedeon Macon, a French Huguenot who settled in Virginia during the second half of the seventeenth century after the revocation of the edict of Nantes.

These Macons, Pavilly points out, became a prominnet Virginia family and left place-names in three other States—Georgia, Mississippi and Missouri. Nathaniel Macon, later a Senator, was one of the heroes of the Revolutionary War.

The Macon family is said to have originated in the Saone-et-Loire department of France, of which Macon is the seat. Before emigrating to Virginia the family had added the "de" of nobility to its name. Jean de Macon was a doctor of law at Orleans.

Another Macon—Thomas—was a brother-in-law of James Madison, fourth President of the United States.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

Afflicted With Fault Finding Disposition, Girl Asks How to Overcome It.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I have been reading your column since you started and marvel at the wisdom you show. If anyone can help me, I believe you can. It's my disposition, and what a disposition—! Everything and everybody gets a share of criticism, and it's usually adverse. I can find a flaw in anything. When I meet a person, if I like him (or her—as is generally the case) I can't do enough for that person. Then, all of a sudden, he's using me and I'm entirely to blame, as I start everybody off on the wrong foot by giving reason to believe nothing is too much trouble for me to do for a friend, and that anything a friend does will be agreeable to me.

* * * *

If I have a fuss, which is not at all rare, I'm too ashamed afterwards to treat the person right, for I feel as if nobody would want to have anything to do with me again. I actually suffer and try to plan ways to keep off dangerous ground.

* * * *

When a person has the faults I have, why should he mind the other fellow's shortcomings? I think if I could just tell them all not to do this or that, what a fine place this world would be. Is there any help for one who is most anxious to help herself? Who needs all the friends she can muster? It isn't the big faults about people which irritate me; it's their conceit, their lack of table manners, the way they raise their children, and such things.

Sincerely, CRANK.

There Is a Remedy.

DEAR CRANK: "Like if you want to be liked," is the italicized, uncomprising advice given by Donald Laird, Ph. D., D. Sc., professor and head of the department of psychology of Colgate University in his fascinating book, "Why We Don't Like People," recently off the press and reviewed on the woman's page of this newspaper January 21. Laboratory tests of individuals conducted by Dr. Laird "showed that those who expressed their dislike for the greatest number of persons were the very individuals who themselves possessed the largest number of generally disliked traits."

* * * *

Most important traits to cultivate if one wishes to be liked he listed as follows: Be depended upon to do what you say you will. Go out of your way to help others. Do not show off your knowledge. Do not let yourself feel superior to your associates and be careful lest they get the impression you do. Do not reprimand people who do things that displease you. Do not exaggerate in your statements. Do not make fun of others behind their backs. Do not be sarcastic. Do not be domineering.

* * * *

Next in importance are these: Keep your clothing neat and tidy. Do not be bold or nervy. Do not laugh at the mistakes of others. Do not take a vulgar attitude toward the opposite sex. Do not be inclined to find fault with everybody else. (Italics are mine.) Do not correct the mistakes of others. Do not tell jokes at the expense of those listening. Do not try to have your own way. Do not lose your temper. Do not take the initiative in argument. Smile pleasantly (although—he cautions—it is doubtful if smiling while you are insisting on having your own way can entirely offset the effect of your obstinacy). Do not talk continuously. Do not pry into other people's business.

* * * *

Thirdly, he recommends: Do not keep your end of the conversation up by asking questions. (He adds, "the person who, after you have finished recounting an experience or telling a story, says 'What did you do next?' is not increasing his popularity. Day by day in every way he is getting more unpopular"). Do not ask favors of others. Do not be out of patience with modern ideas. Do not be flattering. (Italics are mine.) Do not talk about your personal troubles (i. e., financial reverses, family quarrels or mean things others have done to you.) Do not spread gossip. Do not be dignified. Be cheerful. Be enthusiastic. Do not mispronounce words. Do not be suspicious that people are trying to put something over on you. Do not be lazy. Do not borrow things. Do not tell people what their moral duty is. Do not correct the mistakes of others. Do not tell people what is right and wrong. Do not try to get people to believe as you believe. Do not be a political radical. Do not talk rapidly. Do not laugh loudly.

* * * *

"Is there any help for one who is most anxious to help herself?" you ask. I'm sure there is. I believe it exists for you in procuring a copy of Dr. Laird's splendid textbook on personality development, making an honest analysis of your personality with the help of the classically simple charts contained therein, and putting into practise the sound suggestions he gives for developing traits which win and hold friends. The book is published by A. L. Glaser & Co., Inc., 247 Park avenue, New York City. M. H.

Hobbies Not Needed If the Job Is Right, Educator Declares

HOBBIES have been "overemphasized" and are not necessary if the individual's job suits him, Prof. Philip W. L. Cox, of the New York School of Education, said yesterday in an article published in the Educational Sun, undergraduate newspaper.

"If one's work is such that one's personality expresses itself in it adequately, there is little need for hobbies," wrote the professor. "Such a job by its adequacy has in it whatever variety is needed to encourage fresh viewpoints and changes of specific tasks, and therefore is right for the individual concerned.

"Hobbies—none, I thank you. I'm normal."

Portrait Painter and One of His Canvases

Personality is more difficult to record on canvas than physical beauty, says Hans Schlereth, Washington portrait painter shown above with one of his pictures recently hung in the Arts Club here.

Painter Says Character in Face More Fascinating Than Beauty

Fashion Plate Portraits Called Pretty but Uninteresting by Hans Schelereth, Who Thinks Personality Most Important, Though Most Difficult to Portray.

HANS SCHLERETH, Washington portrait painter and authority on beautiful women, says that character and variety in a woman's face give greater fascination than mere physical beauty.

To him, a mouth with a queer quirk in it, one eyebrow slightly off line, is more attractive than than classic features. He prefers a forehead furrowed and wrinkled by care to a fresh and youthful brow on which time and trouble have left no trace.

"Women who want their portraits to look like fashion plates are making a great mistake," said genial Mr. Schlereth. "Pearl necklaces, velvets, and elegant backgrounds make a pretty picture, it is true, but not necessarily an interesting one. The interesting person to paint is one who has character in her face."

Mr. Schlereth likes to ferret out old peasant women and paint them. One striking portrait was included in a showing of his work at the Arts Club.

Mr. Schlereth confesses, however, that personality is more difficult to put down on canvas than beauty and regularity of feature. The vivid, animated type is the most difficult of all to portray, according to Mr. Schlereth, but well worth the trouble if it can be successfully captured.

A German, Mr. Schlereth has painted many beautiful women in this country and abroad. He studied under the well known German teacher Prof. Carl von Marr, president of the Academy of Fine Arts in Munich. Last year Mr. Schlereth was awarded first prize for one of his paintings by the Society of Washington Artists, and is represented in their exhibition now being held at the Corcoran Art Gallery.

"Lenbach, who painted the Bismarck family and other European notables, deliberately reproduced any peculiarity of feature in his subjects," said Mr. Schlereth. "If a Bismarck had one eye slightly distorted, Lenbach was careful to copy it realistically in his portrait. That's why his paintings are interesting historically as well as artistically."

According to Mr. Schlereth, the key to an attractive personality lies in being natural. He thinks that in this country we try too hard to be what we are not, under the illusion that everyone must be dynamic to be interesting.

"One should not try to 'cultivate' personality," he said. "Such an attitude makes for artificiality. A person who is naturally quiet should not try to be a chatterbox. After all, some people are only too glad to find a good listener.

"For me, every woman has charm from a painter's viewpoint. Age has nothing to do with it. A woman can be as attractive at 50 as she was at 20, if not more so. Nor is it necessary to impress a stranger all at once. One does not need to be overwhelming to be charming. It is a quality which can just as easily grow on one."

So far, Mr. Schlereth has remained immune from any urge to paint the glamorous sirens of Hollywood.

"I would like to paint Greta Garbo, though," he said, after a few minutes of consideration, "but only as she is in real life, not as she is in the movies."

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

"I HAD a room for my children with wainscoting part way up, a moulding, and then wallpaper the rest of the way," explained a soft-voiced lady with the pleasantest seven-room cottage. "Now they have outgrown it as a playroom and I want to use it as a bedroom. Will you suggest ideas? The woodwork is natural finish and I have a nice candlewick spread done in brown. I'd like a color scheme of brown and nasturtium. I have an ivory enamel bed."

If possible we'd have the wainscoting painted a fresh light green, then paper the upper walls in a wallpaper that has a good deal of green in the pattern. A warm brown rug would be pretty for the floor, then for draperies a chintz with lots of bright sunny nasturtium colors in the pattern. Use this same chintz for a boudoir chair and for the dressing table if you have one. I think I'd have an ivory enamel dresser if possible with copper—or brass-based lamps.

Tailored Suits Finding Favor With Women

Hollywood Stylist Declares Trim Attire Flatters Feminine Form.

By the Associated Press.

HOLLYWOOD—It is evident in Hollywood that women finally are beginning to believe what tailors have been telling them for years: That in tailored clothing they can be attractive and still look feminine.

Frank Chester, a stylist who makes clothes for many screen actresses, says that formerly orders from women made up only 10 per cent of his business. Now such orders comprise 40 per cent of his output and are still increasing.

Women have learned, Chester says, that tailored clothing is comfortable and that it is correct, the proper thing for nearly all occasions. But, most of all, he says, they have discovered that such attire, far from giving them a masculine appearance, flatters the feminine figure and presents it in a most attractive light.

Figure "Balanced."

The feminine effect, this tailor explains, is obtained by accentuating the upper part of the body. The waistline is cut high, to divert attention from the hips. The shoulders are padded, to make them appear broader, which in turn has a tendency to make the hips look narrower. It gives the effect of a perfectly balanced figure.

"These points might be termed the general rules involved in the proper design of a woman's tailored suit," says Chester. "There are other factors in the design of clothing for particular types of women.

"A drape effect around the shoulders is designed into suits for stout and for short women. It makes them look thinner and taller. Fine unfinished worsteds, stripes and shark skin are the fabrics used for short women, and the design for their clothing is strictly tailored.

Tweeds for the Tall.

"Tall women wear tweeds to best advantage and their clothes need not be strictly tailored. A bit of ornament or embellishment may be designed into their suits. Women of medium build can wear any kind of fabric attractively but, like small women, their suits should be strictly tailored."

Chester says two-toned tweeds, gabardines and shark skins will be the most popular fabrics this spring.

Spring Wear in Pink, Red to Be Fashionable

London (AP).—All shades of red and pink promise to be fashionable colors this spring. Azalea red is one of the new shades.

Lucy Mannheim, smart West End actress, has chosen this new shade for a motoring outfit which consists of a long semi-fitting coat and jaunty little hat made of softest suede dyed azalea red. So supple is this suede that it tailors as well as cloth and the coat has a becoming slim line.

Parents Urged To Teach Youth Use of Money

Avoiding Lesson Generally Has Effect Opposite That Desired.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

"THERE is something so sordid about money. I have tried to keep my children from thinking of it and having to consider it as long as possible."

Even if they do not put it into so many words, many parents hold this attitude. Until the child is actually forced to spend money, they do his buying for him. Even when he starts to school and to mix with other children, they refuse him a regular allowance, preferring to give him whatever money he may need as he needs it.

In this way they hope to keep his mind on higher things and uncontaminated by "filthy lucre." In the end, however, they achieve the very opposite of what they are aiming at. The child grows up ignorant of the value and use of money, and is apt either to over or under estimate it.

Attitude Toward Money.

Money in itself is not bad any more than food or warmth or any other physical need of life. Anything used wrongly is injurious, and a man may starve himself or overeat, just as he may be a spendthrift or a money grubber. How to eat and how to use money are equally important. And possibly of the two, the money question looms larger.

As long as the present civilization lasts, money will be a vital factor in everyone's life, and the happy man or woman will be the one who knows how to acquire and spend money wisely.

When To Give Money.

As soon as a child is able to express a desire for something outside the daily routine supplies of life, he is old enough to have his first lessons in money as a mechanism of exchange. His first allowance may be a penny a week or even a penny a day, and it should be increased steadily according to his needs and the family's means.

Fishes, Marine Plants Used in Crepe Patterns

Paris (AP).—Fishes and marine plants make novel patterns on printed crepes which will fashion some of the new 1936 spring frocks. The designs appear in red, blue and green on white or ivory backgrounds and are indicative of a new trend to pattern silks with something else besides flowers.

Tuberculosis Still Menace to Adult Health

Public Misled About Disease by Optimistic Reports of Progress to Date.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Part 1.

STUDENTS of tuberculosis are calling attention to an obvious fact, namely, that in our desire to stop the disease at its source (childhood) we have somewhat neglected the problem of the infected adult. Our mortality figures show clearly that the focus of tuberculosis lies in adult life—in women between the ages of 15 and 35, and among men between the ages of 40 and 60.

Health societies dealing with the prevention of tuberculosis naturally have stressed the progress side of the picture and the public has been led to believe that the disease—while serious—no longer presents a national health problem. Tremendous progress has been made, particularly since the discovery of the tubercle bacillus by Robert Roch, but estimates indicate that there are now about 800,000 cases of lung tuberculosis in the United States. Heart disease is the greatest killer, and accidents come next in importance, but tuberculosis is well toward the top of the list.

Disease Contagious.

We have also failed to recall that tuberculosis is contagious and that the existence of a case in a family may mean, and probably will mean, that one or more additional members will be infected. For example, in a certain Massachusetts city, a survey was made of 185 households totaling 833 persons. One case of active lung tuberculosis expectorating live organisms was found in each home. Only one of the active cases was under 15 years of age; 146 were between 15 and 45, and 38 were older. Within two years 52 additional cases in these 185 homes were reported, most of whom were over 15 years of age.

Human sputum that contains the tubercle bacilli is a health menace. The organisms can live for hours or even days depending upon the environment and can gain entrance to the body via the nose or mouth—through inhaling infected dust particles, or through eating infected food. Poor hygienic surroundings, fatigue, excesses of all sorts, insufficient or improper food and bad sleeping and living conditions—all lower resistance and permit the growth of many types of bacteria.

Symptom's Vary.

When the disease becomes established in the lungs—the most common site—the symptoms vary widely. The onset may be so insidious that a fairly firm foothold may be gained ere the victim is aware that anything is wrong. There is often but a mild sense of fatigue. The individual may complain that he tires easily or that he feels "below par." If there is a low grade afternoon fever, with a somewhat increased rate of the heart beat, accompanied by loss of weight and strength, a careful examination should be made. The importance of early diagnosis cannot be too strongly emphasized. If the disease is detected before extensive damage has occurred recovery is practically certain. If early symptoms are ignored, however, they will increase in severity. Coughing with expectoration, the development of pleurisy, and the appearance of a small amount of blood from the lungs usually mean that the disease is well established.

Hemorrhage Is Signal.

In other cases there may be no fatigue or afternoon temperature. A productive cough may be entirely absent and the first signal noticed by the patient may be a slight hemorrhage from the lungs. For example, a college student of 24, with a powerful physique, suffered a fairly extensive lung hemorrhage a few weeks ago. He had not been ill since childhood and was carrying a full schedule of work. A year ago, as a matter of routine (required by his college), an X-ray picture of his chest disclosed no evidence of disease, and a careful physical examination gave him a clean bill of health. In the autumn of 1935 a second physical examination was made (again as a matter of routine) with no disease findings. Following the recent hemorrhage another X-ray plate showed a diffuse area of tuberculosis in the upper left part of one lung.

This discussion will be continued tomorrow.

Varied Salads For Luncheon Are Important

Combinations of Grapefruit Serve Double Purpose on the Menu.

By Dorothea Duncan.

DINNER salads are never much of a problem, for with the heaviest meal of the day we naturally want a light refreshing salad made of simple greens with a thin or piquant dressing. Any of the greens may be used and they vary with the season. At present iceberg lettuce, French endive, Chinese cabbage, romaine, both red and white cabbage, celery and chicory are prominently cast as dinner salad ingredients.

Dressing may be varied. Mayonnaise, French dressing and cooked salad dressing are the three basic dressings, but each one of these may be served in combination with an interesting array of seasonings—chopped olives, sweet pickles, chili sauce, crumbled Roquefort cheese, catsup, &c.

Luncheon salads are often more difficult, especially if the salad is to be an important part of the meal. Sometimes the menu is built around the salad—it is the main luncheon course. At other times the salad is concocted of the type of ingredients as to make a dessert unnecessary. Whatever its purpose, the luncheon salad is a very important part of the meal and must be varied frequently, lest the family tire of the ingredients and refuse to eat it.

Grapefruit which is of excellent quality and inexpensive during the winter months should be considered and you will find it particularly versatile as a luncheon salad ingredient, especially when you are planning your salad to take the place of a dessert as well.

The following grapefruit salad combinations are suggested for the luncheon where the salad is to serve a two-fold purpose—that of bringing a crisp green into the menu and providing a finishing touch to the meal as well.

Fruit Salad with Banana Dressing.

Place on individual salad plate a leaf of crisp lettuce. Top this with a thin slice of pineapple (may be the split circle of a piece of canned pineapple). On this arrange several orange and grapefruit segments. Garnish the center with a sprig of crisp cress and serve with banana dressing.

Banana Dressing.

Press six very ripe bananas through a sieve, add ¼ cup of lemon juice, ⅛ teaspoon each of salt and paprika and ¼ teaspoon of powdered sugar. Mix well and chill thoroughly.

Grapefruit and Grape Salad.

½ cup grapes, skinned and seeded
¾ pound cream cheese
Fresh horseradish root
2 grapefruit
Lettuce

Arrange two whole sections of grapefruit, free from all membrane and seeds, on a leaf of lettuce. Between the sections place a few grapes stuffed with cream cheese seasoned with grated horseradish and a touch of salad dressing. Let the cheese extend a little beyond the grapes. Dress with current jelly dressing.

Currant Jelly Dressing.

¼ teaspoon mustard
¾ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon black pepper
½ teaspoon powdered sugar
Dash of cayenne
2 tablespoons vinegar
4 tablespoons olive oil
2 heaping tablespoons currant jelly

Set a small bowl in cracked ice, add the dry ingredients, the vinegar, and then last add slowly the oil, beating with an egg beater; add one spoonful of the jelly, beating well, then the other, and beat until smooth and thick.

Grapefruit Salad.

Serve whole sections of grapefruit, nicely cut out with all skin and seeds removed, on lettuce with the following dressing:

½ cup cream cheese
¼ cup mayonnaise
4 heaping tablespoons guava jelly
½ cup heavy cream.

Mash the cheese, softening it with a little of the dressing. Beat the jelly with a fork and blend with the cheese. Whip the cream and combine with the first mixture and just before serving fold in the remaining mayonnaise.

Grapefruit and Tomato Salad.

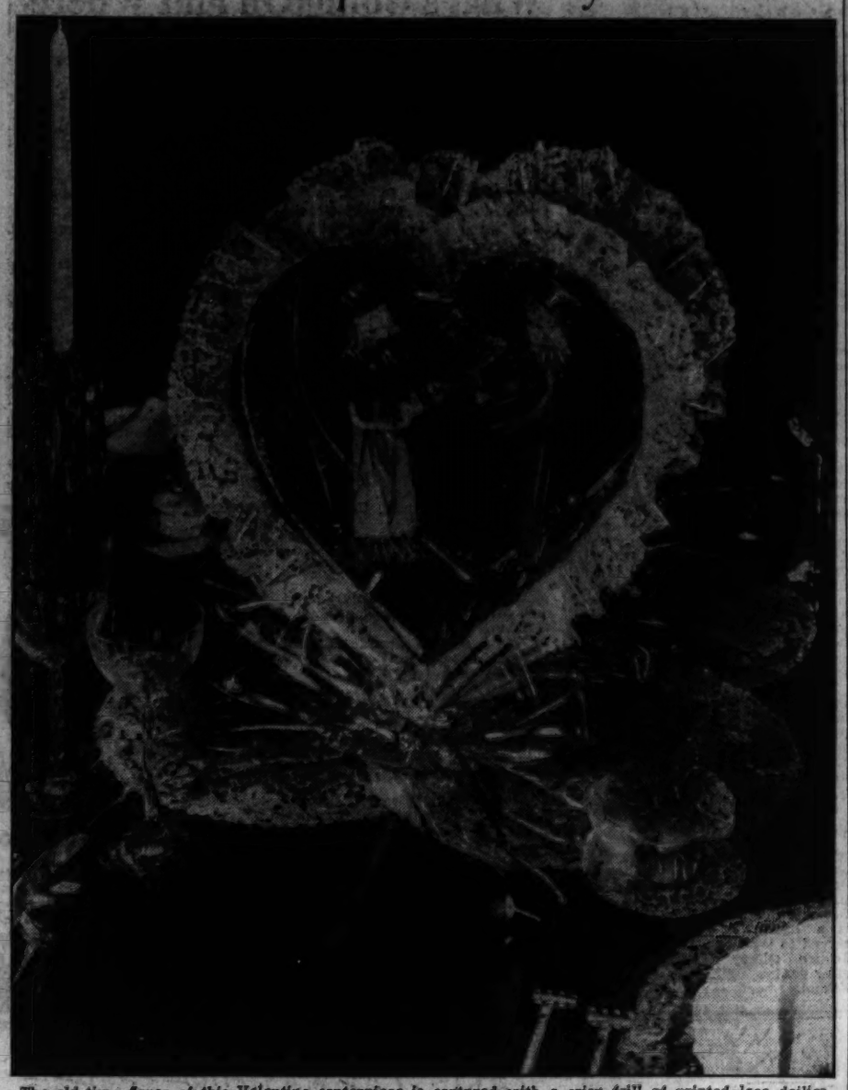
2 or 3 grapefruit
2 or 3 tomatoes
French dressing
lettuce
1 green pepper

Remove sections from grapefruit; free from all white skin and seeds. Remove skin from tomatoes, and cut lengthwise in sections about the size of the grapefruit. Place two sections of grapefruit on plate with a tomato section in between to make a well rounded serving. Garnish with cress or lettuce. Place alternate servings of two sections of tomato with a grapefruit between. Over these salads pour a French dressing and over the top of each lay a trellis of finely shredded green pepper, which has been chilled in ice water until crisp.

Eggs and Tomatoes.

Baked eggs in tomato cups make an interesting main luncheon dish. Prepare by cutting the top off firm tomatoes, scooping out the inner pulp and filing each tomato with one egg. Set the tomatoes in buttered ramekins, season with salt and pepper and dot with butter and bake in a moderate oven until the eggs are set.

Hearts Are Trumps on February Fourteenth



The old-time flavor of this Valentine centerpiece is captured with a crisp frill of printed lace doilies made from cellulose film in the natural color. The quaint crepe paper figures are dressed in red transparent wrapping and are inclosed in the crystal-clear covering of the heart.

Home-Made Centerpiece Lends Romance to St. Valentine Party

Dolls, Easily Made of Wire and Crepe Paper, Are Inclosed in Heart-Shaped Table Decoration, Combining Old-Time Flavor With Modern Smartness.

ST. VALENTINE'S day is always a welcome occasion to those who enjoy giving parties, because the traditional symbol lends itself so gayly to table decoration. And there is a lot of inspiration of the decorative possibilities of the heart centerpiece shown in the photograph. Edged with frills made from printed lace doilies of cellulose film, this home-craft creation combines an old-time flavor with modern smartness.

The romantic little figures—a sentimental youth presenting a bouquet to his ladylove—are easily fashioned from wire and crepe paper, and dressed in costumes of the paper and transparent red wrapping. They stand inside the heart, which is built on a wire frame, and are inclosed in a crystal-like covering of clear transparent wrapping.

These dolls are about 8 inches tall and can be made very realistic with features cut from bits of colored wrapping and hair fashioned from fringed strips of transparent yellow. The girl wears a crepe paper skirt and square-neck waist, both covered with red wrapping. A red ruffle, ¾ of an inch deep, edges her skirt, and she has a sash and sleeve trimming of transparent ribbon. Each sleeve is a 5½-inch square of the red wrapping, folded in half, and gathered over a piece of wire, at shoulder and elbow. To make the cunning poke bonnet, cut a piece of the red 6 by 11 inches, fold to 3 by 11 inches and gather across the fold. This piece is then placed on the doll's head, tied around the crown with spool wire, and the flaring edges cut in poke shape. The bonnet is trimmed with transparent ribbon.

The young gentleman's costume matches his companion's. Each sleeve and trouser leg is separately cut, pasted and covered with red. The waist is a straight band with slits for armholes and has a ruffled red collar and "buttons" of small silver circles. For the hat, cut a 2-inch circle of cardboard and make a small hole in the center. From this hole, cut several ½-inch slashes toward the edge, to make small tabs which are bent up for correct headsize. Then cut a cardboard band 4½ by 1 inches and next cut this down ½-inch along the 4½-inch edge. Fit the uncut edge around headsize of circle, lap to size and paste the tabs of the circle to fit the top of the hat and paste it to the tabs. This foundation is covered will silver paper and trimmed with a band and bow of red cellulose film.

The quaint bouquet consists of two silver hearts, ¾ of an inch across which are pasted together and surrounded with a ruffle of transparent red and a gathered doily of printed lace. When pasting the hearts, place spool wire between, leaving an end to insert in the raffle.

Now this engaging young couple is ready for the setting. To make the heart, form two 36-inch circles of number 15 wire, and bend into heart shape. These frames are then connected at the top and bottom points with a 9-inch wire which is bent 2 inches at each end, making the two frames 5 inches apart. The same length of wire is placed about 5 inches to left and right of lower points, for the dolls to stand on. Paper-wound wires at each side support the heart upright on a 12-inch circle of silver cardboard. After fastening the dolls in position, cover the front, back and sides of the heart with clear wrapping, edge with a 2-inch frill of red wrapping, and another 2-inch ruffle cut from 12-inch doilies. Fasten with Scotch tape. Tie a gathered piece of wrapping to each side of the heart and decorate it at th ebase with a many-looped bow of silver-edged transparent ribbon.

Hints for Leftovers.

Leftover cooked chicken or ham may be used very attractively in the following manner. Chop chicken very fine and season highly, add half the quantity of minced ham; moisten with its own gravy or cream. Roll out trimmings of puff pastry or plain pastry and cut in rather large rounds, moisten the edges slightly. Lay a tablespoon of mixture on one-half of each round of the paste, fold the other half over it, press the moistened edges closely together and bake in a quick oven, or fry in deep hot fat.

Mayonnaise Varied For Use in Salads

Real mayonnaise may be varied to give variety to a number of salads. A few of the most interesting variations are prepared as follows:

Fluffy pecan mayonnaise: To 1 cup of mayonnaise add ½ teaspoon sugar, ½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, beating well. Then add 1 tablespoon of boiling water and chill; fold in 1 stiffly beaten egg white and 1 tablespoon grated pecan meats. This is especially attractive for plain green salads—romaine, hearts of lettuce, etc. Russian cheese dressing is also delicious with green salads. To 4 tablespoons of mayonnaise add 2 tablespoons of chili sauce, 1 chopped hard-cooked egg, and 2 tablespoons pimiento cheese.

Beard, 12 Aids Lose on Appeal In Gaming Case

U. S. Demands Bondsmen Surrender Leader, Others for Jail Sentences.

In a sweeping opinion yesterday, the United States Court of Appeals upheld the conviction of the portly and florid-faced Sam R. Beard, alleged king of the District's gamblers, and 12 of his associates on charges of conspiring to violate the District's anti-gambling laws. Unless the United States Supreme Court interferes, the 13 will have to serve terms in the Lorton Reformatory.

Beard, described as the mastermind of a syndicate that had its headquarters in the Mather Building, from whence race track information was disseminated to a score of outer-lying establishments, was given a sentence of from two to six years, and his henchmen were given terms of from one to three years each.

The others were William Carroll, James T. Gallagher, Fred H. Heck, George E. Hutchins, Melville G. Jacobs, Sidney Kaplan, Lewis L. Levy, Fred J. Meese, Timothy H. Noel, Joseph A. O'Callaghan, John J. Sortori and William G. Smith.

$34,000 in Bonds.

When the court made known its decision, the Government moved to have the defendants surrendered by their bondsmen. Assistant United States Attorney Roger Robb, with the backing of United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett, filed with the Appellate Court a memorandum asking that the bonds, aggregating $34,000, on which the 13 are now at liberty, be canceled and that they be compelled to begin serving their terms, imposed nine months ago. Action on the petition will be had late this week.

Nine points raised by attorneys for the defendants in seeking a review of the Court of Appeals were brushed aside in the opinion, which was written by Associate Justice D. Lawrence Groner. The arguments by the attorneys stressed their contention the indictment was defective in that it was vague; second, that the man named in the search warrant was not in the place when the raiders forced an entrance.

Wire Tapping Cited.

Third, the wire-tapping activities of the police were upheld because of a United States Supreme Court ruling; fourth, admission of declarations made by various of the defendants out of the presence of the others; fifth, admission of evidence of raids on other establishments allegedly connected with the Mather Building system; the remaining points which raised the right of the trial justice to lock up the jury, and to overrule the motion for a directed verdict, and denial of a motion for a new trial.

The Government pictured the Beard syndicate as a gigantic organization that supplied race-track data to various places in the city. Police said they found more than 60 phones in operation when they smashed down the doors and gained entrance. They also said while they were in the place numerous bets were phoned in by persons who concealed their identities behind cryptic numbers.

All Government employes from Michigan are invited by Donald L. Luxford (C), executive secretary of the Michigan State Society, to attend the society's seventy-fifth annual dinner and dance Thursday night at the Continetal Hotel, beginning at 6:30. Alvin Meissner (F), Bureau of Engraving and Printing has designed a special invitation and other Federal people are taking a leading part in the affair.

Dr. Will W. Alexander, assistant administrator of the Resettlement Administration, who has long been a leader in discussions of racial and economic problems of the country, has an article on "Rural Resettlement" in the current issue of the Southern Review, the new quarterly recently inaugurated at the Louisiana State University. Dr. Alexander also is director of the Commission on Interracial Co-operation and president of Dillard University.

Besides numerous photographs it is illustrated with colored plates from paintings by the eminent Canadian bird artist, Maj. Allen Brooks.

Speaks on Drainage.

Lewis A. Jones, chief of the Division of Drainage and Soil Erosion Control, Bureau of Agricultural Engineering, recently addressed the members of the Illinois Society of Engineers in session at Urbana, Ill. In discussing the drainage investigations of the bureau over a period of 30 years, Jones said the cost of farming poorly drained land is just as great and frequently is greater than the cost of farming well-drained land. Since 1915, he said, the work of his division has been devoted primarily to technical research investigations covering the whole drainage field, and today includes studies of rates of runoff from agricultural lands and investigations to determine the factors that influence the permanency of underdrains.

THE Forest Service is planning to initiate the use of short-wave radio sets to link the scattered units of the Puerto Rico national forests where other methods of communication are impractical or costly. A. Gael Simson, technical expert in charge of radio for the Forest Service, says that under the plan for the system there would be a medium-power main station on each national forest unit in Puerto Rico in contact with small lightweight portable sets carried by forest officers or crews of the Puerto Rican CCC camps working in the forests. The national forest units would also be in touch with Forest Service headquarters near San Juan. "Operating one of our portable radio stations in the midst of a Puerto Rican forest is at times like working a set in a warm shower bath," Simson comments.

Historic Buildings Survey.

Q. I recently read something about a survey to be made of historic buildings of America. Can you tell me what the nature of this survey will be?——Mabel I. Rice (F).

A. An allotment of $534,000 of WPA funds has been approved for carrying on the historic American buildings survey in 31 States and the District of Columbia. Measured drawings will be made of the buildings selected for the survey and will be added to the material collected by the survey in 1934, which is now in the Library of Congress. The National Park Service will advise the WPA where the projects are to be located and the amount of the allotment for each region. A daily average of 800 workers in the professional and technical classifications allied to architecture will be employed during six months.

Uncle Same, Patron of Arts.

Q. What are the branches of the Federal Government that deal with the fine arts—Mrs. George E. Robbins (C).

A. Several Government agencies deal with the fine arts, the principal ones being the Commission of Fine Arts, of which Mr. H. P. Caemmerer is secretary and administrative officer; the National Gallery of Art, Ruel P. Tolman, acting director; the Freer Gallery of Art, John E. Lodge, curator. The last two mentioned are under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, which has also a Division of Graphic Arts under Mr. Tolman. Besides these, there are many bureaus and offices that deal with the fine arts in their more practical aspects, such as the Supervising Architect's Office, Treasury; the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Office of Education, Interior, and the Veterans' Administration. There are, too, the WPA and before it the PWA, which have sponsored important artists projects.

Roberts Scores Right of Errors In Phone List

Directory Service Is Paid by Subscriber, People's Counsel Says.

A proposal that would absolve the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. of liability for errors or failure to list subscribers in the telephone directories was protested yesterday by People's Counsel William A. Roberts.

The suggested tariff was filed with the Public Utilities Commission by the telephone company, which stipulated that the firm's liability would be limited to a monthly refund for each month in which the name of the subscriber was omitted or erroneously printed.

Directory service, Roberts informed the commission, is not a free service but is paid for by the subscriber along with the usual tariff rate.

"The telephone company," Roberts said, "could not operate its business without directories. Accurate directory service is essential to the consumer. The revision purports to use the powers of the Public Utilities Commission to relieve the telephone company from liability in the event of negigence in erroneous listings or failure to list subscribers' names."

"I gravely doubt the efficacy of any such provision and believe that, in spite of the commission's approval of the proposed change, anybody who had money enough to engage counsel could recover against the telephone company."

Darling Talks At Wild Life Session Here

5-Day Rally Launched by 'Pep' Message From President.

Cartoonist Urges Conservationists to Carry Fight to Polls.

Inspired by a "pep message" from President Roosevelt, and the stinging words of Jay N. "Ding" Darling, chief until recently of the Biological Survey, the North American Wild-Life conference yesterday launched a five-day session here, its objective being to formulate a permanent, continental conservative program.

"I sincerely hope," said the President, whose message was read by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, "that with the help of good neighbors to the north and south of us, your conference will unite upon a common purpose and a common program."

Cartoonist Darling, who resigned his Federal post several months ago because Congress was deaf to his appeal for funds, challenged conservationists to carry their fight to the election polls, as one means of calling attention to the plight of game fish, birds and animals facing extinction.

Approximately 2,000 leaders in the movement, representing every State, Canada and Mexico, converged yesterday upon the Capital to open the conference, called by President Roosevelt. Gathering in the connecting auditoriums of the Labor-I. C. C. buildings, about 1,500 of them heard Darling's bristling demand for united action.

Wild-Life Neglect.

In his ringing style of delivery, Darling drew a picture of polluted lakes and slaughter-house hunting grounds, the result of wild-life neglect and misuse.

"Wealth will continue to exist on this continent only so long as the natural resources of our soil and water continue to yield up their riches," said Darling. "When these are gone, prosperity, standards of living and happiness among our people will vanish with them."

Stressing the point that wild life conservation is not incompatible with industrial interests, he told how lakes and streams have been polluted by the oil and waste of factories, wholly without necessity. Even the relief rolls throughout the country "would have been a fraction of their present astonishing magnitude, if Nature's pantry had been wisely guarded," he declared.

"The Connecticut River, which threads a highly developed industrial community, is foul with sludge and oily slime waste from factories and municipalities. It once harbored a bankfull run of salmon, and valuable aquatic life. The value of that annual salmon run in dollars and cents, food and employment, as against the value of the river as a polluted sewer, was never considered.

Tragedy of Situation.

"The tragedy of the situation is that we might have both the salmon and an equal industrial development. One great advantage of nature's factories over man's industries is that they do not close down in time of panic. Nature is oblivious to man's hysteria, goes blithely on producing, and only succumbs when we poison it with our filth and waste."

Couching in platform language the ideas he is continually expressing in his cartoons, Darling directed a mild blast at "conservationists" who think that, by putting out suet for birds in winter and subscribing to an outdoor magazine, they are doing their part.

"Meanwhile," he continued, "the Hudson River, once visited annually by a prolific run of shad and sturgeon, has been transformed into a vacant biological desert.

"The Potomac shad run is almost gone.

"The Mississippi River, once bank-full with the annual run of sturgeon going to their spawning grounds, sees no more shoals of sturgeon. The productivity of aquatic life of the entire Mississippi watercourse is approaching the zero point.

"The Great Lakes, once the world's greatest fresh water reservoirs of what might have been a perpetual source of food and employment, have been wantonly depleted. The herring industry on Lake Erie is gone. Bulinets are dragging the depth of Lake Michigan and Lake Superior for the remnants of a once magnificent supply of whitefish.

Salmon Industry Hurt.

"The salmon industry in our Pacific Coast States is being gradually driven to Alaska by the exploitation, industrial pollution and power plants on the coastal rivers which flow into the Pacific."

Twelve to 15 million dollars is being spent annually on State programs, many of which he described as "intermittent and subject to complete reversals, and new personnel, with every change of political administration."

Game conversation is utterly ignored by America's educational systems, Darling said. When work relief projects were instituted to relieve unemployment, "everyone else was awake and the wild-lifers sound asleep," he chided, adding, "the measure of their activity seems to end with high-sounding resolutions."

"We need a national program of restoration and conservation," he said, "which shall be adopted as a policy of our national Government. Its responsibilities must be defined, and the demarcation between Federal and State responsibility determined. Co-operative devices between the States and the Federal Government, now non-existent, should be inaugurated."

While defending the integrity of Government officials in game conservation matters, Darling nevertheless charged them with conspicuous indifference to the subject. He said that "as a rule, they are totally and completely ignorant of the fact that a sentiment for wild-life conservation is worthy of their notice."

The reason, he said, is that game protectors have neglected to make themselves articulate. They number into the millions, but they "exert less political influence on our governments, both State and national, than the Barrel Rollers Union in Pumpkin Center."

"The forces of wild-life conservation," said the speaker, "are as helpless and ineffective as the Ethiopian army, divided into a thousand tribal units, speaking different languages, armed with spears and arrows, brave but unorganized. "If they will combine their mass strength, for the common aims of more wild life and restoration of environment, no public official will fail to seek their mass voting strength in his support. You will no longer be going to them as suppliants—they will be coming to you.

"After all, one of the jobs of the public official is to serve the people who elect him. Conservationists never helped elect anybody or, as conservationists, defeated anyone. What is more, they never use their numerical strength after election. I am quite certain that there are more voters who are converts to the benefits of conservation than any other single issue of public interest."

F. A. Silcox, chief of the Forest Service, and chairman of the conference committee, presided at the opening session. In his introductory remarks he stressed the gravity of the game situation and reminded the delegates of their duties and opportunities.

Greetings from the President of Mexico and the Prime Minister of Canada were delivered, respectively, by Juan Zinser and J. B. Harkins. Hoyes Lloyd, of Ottawa, spoke on the administration of Canadian wild life and Senor Zinser reviewed the Mexican situation.

Lloyd will preside at this morning's session, introducing Senator Key Pittman, and other speakers.

Jumping Jupiter, rebellious brook trout in the Wild Life display at the Hotel Mayflower, is shown as he was helped back into his tank yesterday by P. G. Kirby, chief engineer of the hotel. A few minutes later, however, he had jumped out again.

'Jumping Jupiter,' Brook Trout, Leaps in Lobby for Delegates

Fish Does Not Mind Getting 'Tanked,' but Doesn't Like It for Hours on End; So Piscatorial Rescue Squad Helps.

"Jumping Jupiter," as he was appropriately named by one spectator, put on his own distinctive wild-life show in the promenade of the Hotel Mayflower yesterday, for the edification of game conservationists attending the North American Wild-life Conference.

"Jumping Jupiter" is a brook trout who doesn't mind getting tanked, but does object to remaining that way for hours on end.

Yesterday he was so persistent in leaping out of his rectangular prison at frequent intervals, that the management was compelled to assign a rescue detail, consisting of one bellboy. The guard's sole duty was to pick Jupiter off the floor as often as he jumped out.

Each fall meant a 6-foot jolt for the fish, inducing numerous observers to shake their heads sympathetically. But, as one learned delegate explained:

"It doesn't hurt him a bit, so long as he's picked up correctly when being returned to the tank."

"Jumping Jupiter" is but one of many exhibits which has turned the usually sedate promenade of the Mayflower into a veritable Eden, in which bison, wolves and wildcats (mounted, of course), glare from either wall, and five live quail huddle forlornly behind a pane of glass.

Facing Extinction.

Vividly depicting the plight of North American birds and mammals facing extinction, the exhibition represents the pooled efforts of the National Association of Audubon Societies, American Forestry Association, U. S. Forest Service, Biological Survey, Bureau of Fisheries, Interior Department, Pennsylvania Game Commission, National Rifle Association and other governmental and private organizations.

The Smithsonian Institution yesterday opened an exhibition at the National Museum of mounted specimens, ranging in size and character from the extinct passenger pigeon to the Steller sea cow, an exterminated species.

The last of the passenger pigeons, killed off by the millions in the nineteenth century, died at the Cincinnati Zoo 21 years ago. The Steller sea cow and the plains grizzly bear, both of which have been extinct for several decades, are represented by skulls.

Citizens' Group Battles Rise In D. C. Taxes

Dupont Circle Association Hears U. S. Doesn't Give District Fair Share.

The Dupont Circle Citizens Association yesterday went on record in emphatic opposition to any increase in taxes for the District.

The action was taken after the group heard Demarest Lloyd, chairman of its committee on taxes, report on the fiscal affairs of the District.

The reason for increasing taxes, Lloyd's report stated, was "the Federal Government does not contribute its fair and proper proportion of the expense of the District government."

If the Federal Government refuses to raise the contribution to the District, Lloyd said, "an immediate revision of the policemen's and firemen's pension fund to an actuarial basis would save taxpayers $400,000 a year."

"Elimination of floaters from relief rolls and a gradual reduction of relief expenditures would also help," Lloyd said.

Michigan Park.

The Michigan Park Citizens Association voted last night to ask the House and Senate Appropriations Committee that the District of Columbia budget be transmitted directly from the Commissioners to the Appropriations Committee. This step would eliminate the Budget Bureau and speed up action on appropriations, it was stated.

An investigation by the Public Utilities Commission of crowded conditions of buses on Saturdays that serve the Michigan Park area was asked by the association. The group charges that on Saturday, due to the school holiday, the number of buses serving the community are reduced.

A letter will be sent to Director of Traffic William A. Van Duzer today asking for a traffic light at Twelfth and Monroe streets northeast. The Brookland Citizens Association, in whose district the light may be installed, will be notified of the action taken.

Kenilworth Meeting.

Charles Maize was named chairman of a special safety committee of the Kenilworth Citizens Association as the association met last night at the Kenilworth School. Other members of the committee were Harry Kent, Aubrey Driggers and Ralph Keeler.

It was decided that the association will sponsor a turkey dinner and dance on February 15 at the Kenilworth Community Center.

Patsy Norris, third grade, and Florence Wolfe, fifth grade, both of Kenilworth School, were announced as winners of first and second prizes, respectively, in an essay contest sponsored by the association.

I. D. Wiseman, chairman of the membership, announced a membership contest drive in which the association will be divided into five teams. Six new members were admitted last night.

Several amendments to the constitution and by-laws of the Manor Park Citizens Association suggested in a report brought in by William H. Seaquist, committee chairman, were adopted at the association's meeting last night.

In one of the amendments the group's territory was slightly restricted, its northern border becoming Van Buren street instead of Whittier street, as formerly.

Funeral services for Jean C. Baxter, nurse who died Saturday in Georgetown Hospital a day after she was found lying frozen and semi-conscious on the ice of Rock Creek near P street, were held yesterday afternoon at Zurhorst's funeral home. Burial was in Glenwood Cemetery.

Miss Baxter was the daughter of the late Capt. and Mrs. Baxter, old Capitol Hill family, and a sister of the late Commander William Baxter, U. S. N.

Dr. Cahill's Condition Is Reported Improved

Dr. James A. Cahill, professor of surgery at Georgetown University Medical School, was reported "resting comfortably" last night at Georgetown Hospital, where he is recuperating from an emergency operation for a ruptured appendix, said to have been caused by a tooth crown which he swallowed several months ago.

Physicians at the hospital said that Dr. Cahill was a little improved yesterday. His condition was first described as critical.

House Begins Traffic Toll Survey Here

Planning for Road Study Started After Post's 'Reason Why' Series.

Law Violations Blamed for 9,024 Crashes by Van Duzer.

Congressional eyes were turned on Washington traffic yesterday as members of a sub-committee of the House District Committee began long-heralded efforts to learn the "reason why" behind the toll of accidents, injuries, deaths and damage.

Plans for the Congressional traffic probe were started soon after The Post opened its "reason why" series, attempting to learn the answer behind repeated violations of the law.

And yesterday, as Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer started testimony before the House group, it was disclosed that law infractions are responsible for a "big proportion" of Washington's accidents. Law-breaking motorists play a major part in the city's burdened problem, it was charged.

Accidents Analyzed.

In analyzing accidents and their causes, Van Duzer said that two-thirds of the 9,024 crashes in recent years could be laid to some violation of District safety rules. Most frequent of offenses contributing to accidents are excessive speeding, failing to yield the right-of-way, driving while intoxicated, passing on the wrong side and weaving in traffic, Van Duzer declared.

Presenting a comprehensive picture of local conditions, Van Duzer told the sub-committee that Washington has seen a 100 per cent increase in automobile registrations during the past 10 years.

In this connection, he cited the number of Government employes now working on the "staggered hour" system.

"There are 30,000 Federal workers already on the staggered plan," said Van Duzer. "But there are 80,000 others who still go to work at the same hour—and 40 per cent of them drive automobiles."

Rush-hour congestion was relieved "somewhat" when the staggered-hour plan was adopted last April, the traffic director said. Since then, however, the number of Government workers has increased by 10,000, he added.

"Thousands of these must be placed on the staggered plan if congestion is to be relieved," he said.

As the hearing opened, Representative Carpenter (Democrat), of Kansas, chairman of the sub-committee, pointed out that more persons were killed in automobile accidents in the United States between 1920 and 1935 than the total killed in all the country's wars.

He outlined the sub-committee's traffic investigation, citing six points in the problem to be covered.

"In general, this investigation will be devoted to a study of the traffic problem in Washington and will be confined largely to a determination of causes of traffic accidents and a discussion of the best methods which may be adopted to bring about improvements."

The problem:

"1. Increase in registrations for the past several years; registrations per capita; comparisons with other cities; nonresident traffic; accidents caused by nonresidents.

"2. Increase in the number of Government employes in the District of Columbia and the relation of this increase to the traffic situation in and around the triangle.

"3. The traffic flow and the relation between the rush hour and the non-rush hour traffic pattern; the cordon count; comparison with other cities.

4. The street plan in relation to traffic movement, including discussion of traffic circles.

"5. The bridge situation.

6. "Lack of adequate by-pass facilities for interstate traffic."

Van Duzer began his testimony by emphasizing the fact that Washington automobile registrations jumped from 103,000 in 1925 to 208,000 in 1935.

A number of streets have reached the saturation point from the standpoint of traffic, said Van Duzer.

"Is there any connection between congestion and accidents?" asked Carpenter.

"Yes," replied Van Duzer. "Traffic congestion causes accidents. The accident frequency increases between 5 and 6 p. m., when more vehicles are on the streets.

"Why is it low during the morning rush hour, when just as many cars are on the streets?" was the next question.

Alertness Cited.

"The drivers are more alert at that time—they are rested," Van Duzer replied.

M. O. Eldridge, assistant traffic director, who sat beside Van Duzer, spoke up.

"There also are more pedestrians on the streets in the afternoon than in the morning," he said.

As he sought to analyze Washington's accidents, Van Duzer produced an assortment of charts and statistical tables. Among these, it was shown that drivers were operating cars properly in only 1,216 of the 9,024 accidents. In 2,743 cases, the causes were not stated.

It was explained later by Carpenter that the following proposed remedies would be considered by the sub-committee:

Street widening, redesign of circles, new bridges and replacement of old bridges, underpasses and overpasses, street lighting, traffic surveys and planning, regulation of pedestrian traffic, installation of safety islands for the protection of pedestrians, re-examination of all drivers at the end of renewal period, revocation and suspension of drivers permits and semiannual inspection of all cars.

Van Duzer will again take the witness stand when hearings are resumed at 10 a. m. today.

16th Traffic Death For '36 Listed Here

Bartholomew Barry, 72, of 53 K street northeast, died at Casualty Hospital yesterday, Washington's sixteenth traffic casualty in 1936.

Barry, as engineer, was run down on January 15 at First and H streets northwest by an automobile, which, according to police, was operated by Ellsworth Riechert, of Baltimore, Md. Reichert was released on bond after the accident.

Chauffeur in Expensive Auto Breaks Law, Runs Into Trouble

(Editor's note: In an effort to determine the answer to Washington's present traffic problem, with its mounting toll of accidents, The Post has assigned a reporter to learn the reason behind violations of traffic regulations. A reporter, accompanied by an official of the Police Traffic Division, has been cruising in a police car. It is The Post's desire merely to learn "the reason why" of violations. This is the twenty-fifth in a series of stories.)

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Smashed bumpers and dented fenders was the price of careless driving on Washington streets yesterday.

And the price was paid—with interest—as heedless motorists ignored icy thoroughfares and flaunted open disdain for safety rules.

A swirling mist swept the streets and coated windshields with frost as we wended our precarious way through slow-moving traffic, searching for the "reason why" behind violations of the law.

Time and again, cars ahead of us skidded into the curb when drivers suddenly applied brakes. We saw no less than a dozen accidents—all minor, but each presenting a dangerous hazard for "the other fellow."

Many of these accidents could have been avoided. And many couldn't have been avoided in a 10-acre field. The streets were dangerous, and the majority of motorists drove accordingly.

Among the first to exhibit negligence was a uniformed chauffeur. He was driving an expensive-make car near Conecticut avenue and Calvert street northwest.

He skidded into a taxi—and his trouble began.

A shiny fender on the limousine was bent double by the impact. And then the car careened into a pole on the corner. Another fender was smashed.

We arrived at the scene just as the chauffer had reached an "agreement" with the taximan and was driving off.

"He'll be careful after that mix-up," said Policeman J. V. Osterman, our cruising "observer." But we decided to follow the big car "just in case."

"Steps on It."

Policeman Osterman was wrong. As we drove onto Taft Bridge, the chauffeur began to "step on it." We watched our speedometer. It registered 32 miles an hour.

At the next corner we were stopped by a red traffic signal and the speeding sedan disappeared.

A few minutes later, we neared Dupont Circle. Ahead of us, in the center of the street, was the car we had pursued. A cloud of smoke rose from the hood. The chauffeur was standing beside the machine, calling for help.

The car was on fire. Someone ran into the street with a fire extinguished. Someone else turned in a fire alarm. Screeching sirens could soon be heard. But by the time the engines arrived, everything was over.

Osterman questioned the chauffeur.

"What was your hurry," he asked.

"I wasn't in no hurry—just taking Mrs. ——'s (he named the wife of a local business man) laundry to be washed. I wasn't speeding. I just had an accident up the street."

Then he tod about the accident. "I just coudn't hep skiddin," he argued.

But when Oosterman again asked about the speed and careless driving over Taft Bridge, the chauffeur insisted he was in the right.

"I got a speedometer," he said.

Writes Out Ticket.

Osterman told him that in the future that speedometer should be watched, and wrote out a ticket.

"As if I ain't got enough bad luck," lamented the chauffeur.

He called it bad luck, but he never stopped to think what the family of an innocent traffic victim might consider "bad luck" had his heavy car again careened out of control.

We drove for nearly two hours. The explanations after accidents were:

"The streets were slippery; I couldn't help it."

Yet we—and many other motorists throughout the city—drove for hours without an accident or violation.

It can be done.

Retirement Act Benefits Are Extended

House Votes to Permit Its Application to Patronage Workers.

Marriage Clause Repeal, Postmasters' Merit Bills Fail.

The House yesterday did its part to extend the benefit of the civil service retirement act to the patronage employes of the legislative branch by passing the Ramspeck bill, but at the same time it shouted off the calendar the Celler bill to repeal the "marriage clause" and the measure to extend the merit system to first, second and third class postmasters.

The Ramspeck bill, if and when it passes the Senate, will enable legislative employes not now under the retirement act to make application within a limited time for the benefits by paying up the salary reductions from the beginning of their jobs.

Section 2 requires legislative employes to give notice in writing to the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of a desire to come under the retirement act within six months after the enactment of the Ramspeck bill into law.

Legislative employes are defined as those working for either House, those appointed by either House but not a member of one or the other body, the legislative counsel and their aids, the Capitol police force, employes of the Joint Committee on Printing and the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, and clerks to Senators, Representatives and committees.

t was expected that veteran employes on Capitol Hill will not take advantage of the legislation, if it becomes a law, because of the large amounts they would have to contribute to the retirement fund. Younger employes, however, are expected to apply for admittance.

Harry B. Mitchell, president of the Civil Service Commission, in reporting on the bill, pointed out that no other group of employes under the civil service retirement act are permitted to elect whether or not they shall become subject to the provisions of the law.

The retirement act already includes certain employes of the legislative branch, such as those of the Architect of the Capitol, the Library of Congress, and the Botanic Gardens, and requires that they are subject to its provisions regardless of choice.

Ramspeck, chairman of the House Civil Service Committee, said he would seek a special rule on the Celler bill to repeal the economy law requiring dismissal of husband or wife when economies are necessary in executive departments, providing both are employed by the Government.

A chorus of objections greeted the bill when it was brought up yesterday on the consent calendar, thus forcing it off for the remainder of the session. A similar mass objection greeted the bill to place postmasters under civil service.

The sentiment of the House indicated there is little chance that either measure will be enacted into law at this session.

Eddie Cantor Takes His Place Among the Comics Who Can Really Portray a Part

Does Character Justice Despite Early Training

Began as 'Bit' Revue Star; Two Important Events; Theater Notes.

By Nelson B. Bell.

With the possible exception of Mr. Charles Spencer Chaplin, I should say that Eddie Cantor comes nearest being an actor of any of the comedians lending their talents to light screen entertainment.

I might even put the button-eyed comic ahead of Mr. Chaplin, whose revelations of mimetic art are wholly restricted to pantomime before the cameras. Mr. Cantor also talks and sings.

These observations are prompted by a vagrant Sabbath evening visit to Loew's Palace Theater to catch a glimpse of "Strike Me Pink," over which Miss Dorothea Lewis was so enthusiastic in these columns on last Saturday morning.

It occurred to me as I watched the unwinding of this latest of the Sam Goldwyn outlets for the Cantor ebulliences that here is a star who creates and sustains a genuine characterization every time he gets before the lenses and the microphones.

It was not always thus, to coin another phrase that probably will become popular.

In the old days, Eddie was a prankster who devoted his time to vaudeville or the detached and sketchy occupations of the Ziegfeld "Follies"—or the same impresario's creations for the "Nine O'Clock Revue" and "Midnight Frolic" on the roof of the New Amsterdam Theater—which required only a fragmentary and incomplete command of the art of character delineation.

Sketches Were Funny.

Some of the sketches in the "Follies" were hilariously funny, like the one, for example, in which the heavyweight George Le Maire was the osteopath—a Dr. Frank T. Shyne, a little ahead of his time—and Eddie was the "patient." "Victim" is the better word, with genuflections to you, Frank; all you do is break my neck!

Then along came "Kid Boots." This was the first of the Ziegfeld musical comedies, to the best of my recollection, in which Cantor played a consistent part throughout the length of a coherent and listenable play with music.

This was the item, incidentally, that brought George Olsen and His Orchestra into the East for the first time. And the surprising part about that was that when Mr. Olsen, whose wife is the charming songstress Ethel Shutta, and his band arrived in Washington there was no place in the show for them.

The first night they did an entr'acte interval of melody that struck a new note in syncopation as well as instrumentation, and finally, before the week was over, a "spot" had been found for them on the veranda of the country club, served as caddie by Mr. Cantor in the role of "Kid Boots."

Zippy Musical Numbers.

And now the Cantor is visible in "Strike Me Pink" and does perhaps as able a bit of portrayal as he ever has brought to the screen.

Whatever shortcomings may be noted are due to the script rather than to the Cantor. I would by no means be sure that "Strike Me Pink" is as good a comedy as the screen version, for instance, of "The Nervous Wreck." It is, however, very elegant diversion.

Not the least of the picture's assets are the singing of Ethel Merman, the sinuosity of a torrid young dancer who calls herself Rita Rio—which by inverse implication also harks back to the late Flo Ziegfeld—and the tapping of one Sunnie O'Dea, who picks them up and lays them down with a precision that would do credit to a Ginger Rogers, Eleanor Powell, Eleanor Whitney or whatever Eleanors may be standing in the wings ready to go on.

But the point of all this is that, from a mere clown, Eddie Cantor has developed into a player who can handle a part. Harold Lloyd can do the same thing, provided the part is actor-proof to begin with.

I should say that Eddie Cantor is pretty close to the top of the heap—and the musical numbers that he and Ethel Merman do will burn you up and knock you cold, as a certain columnist used to say and probably still does.

So who arrived back from the blistering sunlight of the subtropics yesterday but John J. Payette, general manager of the Warner Brothers interests in Washington and surrounding territory. Mr. Payette is suntanned to a fine dull saddle color and yet declares that he is "in the pink." The fellow obviously is color blind! Anyhow, welcome home and thanks for the pretty postage card.

Two Important Events.

Two theatrical events of importance to Washington get under way tonight.

The first is the premiere of Morgan Baker's manuscript play, "Benevolent Blackmail," which will have its first performance on any stage in the Wardman Park Theater.

"Benevolent Blackmail" is a play dealing with job-juggling and patronage problems, governmental and diplomatic intrigue in the National Capital. It was deemed a little too "strong meat" to be permitted on the stage of any auditorium under the jurisdiction of the District school authorities. So its presentation was transplanted from the Roosevelt auditorium to Wardman Park.

Tonight's inaugural is being sponsored by the Alabama Society of Washington, Mr. Baker, the author, having been a former resident of Birmingham.

The Sick Benefit Association of the American Federation of Government Employes has taken the entire house for the night of Friday, February 7. Other State and governmental units are planning to celebrate "special" nights at Wardman during the run of the play.

Included in the acting personnel are William E. Bryant, Ann Ives, Lucille Dickson, William Baker, as the newspapermen galvanizing a State into casting out a corrupt knave; Jerry McGraw, Laura C. Auld, Romaine Stevens, Mrs. Miles C. Algood and Ted Gardner.

Tournament Begins.

The second of the important local theatrical features of the week is the opening tonight of the District's annual one-act play tournament in the auditorium of Roosevelt High School, Thirteenth and Upshur streets northwest.

Four plays will be subjected to preliminary judgment tonight. They will be Eugene O'Neill's "Where the Cross Is Made," by the Jewish Center Dramatic Society; Harry W. Gribble's "Juliet and Romeo," by the Thespian Society; Francois Coppee's "The Violin Maker of Cremona," by the Little Theater of Takoma Park, and Cleaves Kinkaed's "The Four-Flushers," presented by the Troupers of East Washington Community Center.

The next preliminaries will be held on Thursday night, February 6, in the same auditorium and at the same hour of 8 o'clock.

The finals will be judged by the local drama desks on Saturday night, February 15.

So now you know.

Speaking of banned plays, as we were paragraphs back there, "Private Hicks," Albert Maltz's 1935 prize-winning play of the New Theater Guild, definitely has been excluded from the District Play Tournament. Protests are being made both from Washington and New York. The piece, is in active rehearsal here and will probably be presented for public observation on Friday, February 14. It was tabooed, one is given to believe by its sponsors, as "giving offense to propriety" and causing "acrimonious discussion." That could be said of any New Theater undertaking. That is what the New Theater Movement is supposed to be for and to foster. "Private Hicks" is a provocative play, there can be no gainsaying that. But it is now in a second eminently successful week in Chicago and has engaged enthusiastic attention wherever it has been presented. It points a nice social problem. It may be presented in the auditorium of the National Press Club, although that is by no means determined as this goes to press.

Recalling Two Surprises.

There is a sort of recrudescence of the Eugene O'Neill innovation put into effect upon the occasions of the New York runs of both "Strange Interlude" and "Mourning Becomes Electra" in the suggestion that has been made with regard to Katharine Cornell's March appearance in New York in George Bernard Shaw's "Saint Joan."

Martin Beck, owner of the New York theater, where Miss Cornell will present "Saint Joan" on Tuesday night, March 3, following her preliminary tour, would like to innovate a Viennese custom in America by having Miss Cornell begin her first performance of the Shavian drama at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

This, says Mr. Beck, would permit the critics to remain through the entire play and give them more leisure afterward to write their reviews.

Miss Cornell, on the other hand, feels that, while such an hour apparently suits a continental audience, it may not be convenient to the New York public; so she prefers to adhere to the American custom and to start her premiere performance at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Why Not Try Both?

It will be recalled that great doubt was felt that audiences would be willing to attend a play that began in the late afternoon required a dinner-time intermission and then continued on into the night, when the Theater Guild first contemplated the presentation of O'Neill's "Strange Interlude," the first of his marathon plays.

The public, as a matter of fact and record, practically "ate it up."

That this was not a mere whim was demonstrated by the later tragic trilogy that required an equally extended running time.

Jessie Matthews, the young English dancing comedienne who made such a hit in "Evergreen" last season, will take possession of the screen at the Belasco Theater tonight in "First a Girl" at one of those late Tuesday night previews, the featured successor to Rene Clair's "A Nous la Liberte." The story concerns a girl who, in an emergency, "doubled" for a female impersonator. She can have wealth and love by continuing to pose as one of the opposite gender. But then she falls in love and the fun begins! "First a Girl" will begin its regular all-day schedule of presentations at the Belasco tomorrow.

Casual Observation Note.

On such busy, hectic and utterly cockeyed Mondays as this, there ought to be a law against last lines.

There practically is!

Monumental Tome Goes "Into Work"

Here we have the genial likenesses of the talented Miss Olivia de Havilland, one of the most gifted of the cinema's younger actresses—as was proved by her work in Reinhardt's "A Midsummer Night's Dream"—and that admirable actor, Fredric March, as they will appear in the filmization of Hervey Allen's ponderous fiction known by the name of "Anthony Adverse." This is expected to be one of the most important productions of the year emanating from the Warner Brothers' Burbank lots. The above is a reproduction of the first "still" received from the studio.

William Gillette Back in Play Of Earlier Day

'Three Wise Fools' a Hit at National After Two Honorable Decades.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"THREE WISE FOOLS," John Golden presents William Gillette, James Kirkwood and Charles Coburn in a revival of Austin Strong's comedy-drama in three acts. Directed by Mr. Strong, with settings by Woodman Thompson. At the National Theater.

It is a better comedy-melodrama than many of us remembered that Austin Strong wrote back in 1918, almost two decades ago.

Its revival in the National Theater last night, as a medium for the return to the boards of William Gillette, one of the most revered veterans of the American theater, marked one of the most felicitious occasions of the current season.

This is not recorded in any spirit of saccharine sentimentality, because Mr. Gillette is an octogenarian whose contributions to the native stage have entitled him to respectful encomiums and fulsome praise, regardless of his present eminence as an actor, but because "Three Wise Fools" is still a delightful evening's entertainment.

One suspects that the lines and stage business have been freshened a bit since the play of the three elderly bachelors and their unexpected ward last was seen on a Washington stage. There are signs, portents and omens that someone, probably Austin Strong, himself, author of the piece, has gone over the script with a view to bringing it thoroughly down to date. This, most assuredly, has been done.

Begins Slowly.

There is nothing stodgy about this three-act comedy, except possibly its labored beginning. I did not remember that the first act was so laboriously slow in getting under way.

Neither did I recall, from a view some 18 years ago, that Judge Trumbull was so tardy in getting on the scene. The play really gets under way about three minutes, or possibly less, before the first-act curtain falls. But this is minor quibbling.

The point is that William Gillette is on stage when the first curtain goes up and reveals the same voice, the same sense of dramatic "pace," the same quizzical humor and the same gracious personality that always have characterized his stage appearances from the day of his professional debut in 1875 until his five-year retirement, after a tour in his own play of "Sherlock Holmes," derived from the detective stories by the late Sir Arthur Conon Doyle, beginning some five or six years ago.

Mr. Gillette, just as has been announced from other cities in other newsprints, belies his accession to the ranks of the octogenarians. Occasionally there is a slight "reaching" for lines in his present endeavor, but that is wholly in the character, the mood and within the idiosyncrasies of the role of Theodore Findley, financier, the mainspring of the three wise old codgers who are keeping bachelor quarters in New York and give the play its name.

His voice has lost none of its penetrating dryness, peculiar command of comic inflections or dramatic intensity, when occasion demands.

William Gillette is a gentleman of the theater who stands 6 feet 3 inches tall, now has a thick thatch of snow-white hair and bears upon his brow the laurels of more than 60 years of honorable contribution to the development, the integrity and the wholesomeness of the American stage.

It is a pleasure to have him back and a treat to be able to pay some slight tribute to the importance of the place which he occupies among the enduring figures who, in the final analysis, will give the theater of this country and the English-speaking world a real tradition.

The fabric of "Three Wise Fools" is such as to provide opportunity for practically every member of the cast.

As the other two of the titular triumvirate, Charles Coburn and James Kirkwood, in the respective roles of Dr. Richard Gaunt and Judge James Trumbull, turn in performances that are no less potent in the final counting up of the play's assets than the distinguished work of the star, who has been coaxed out of retirement after a lapse of years.

There is a fine differentiation among these parts, not only in the way they are played, but also in the way they are written. There never is a time when any principal is allowed to tread on any other principal's toes. This is a factor that makes of "Three Wise Fools" an especially happy selection for the return to the local stage of a group of actors who have not been seen "in the flesh" for years on end.

Elizabeth Love is a particularly effective and ingenuous Sydney Fairchild, the ward of the "three wise fools," whom they expect to be a small boy. This is the role that was originally to have been played by Mary Rogers. I can not imagine her, from memories of the ill-fated "On to Fortune," being quite so good as the present incumbent. There is something about Miss Love and her slightly Southern accent that suggests the Margaret Sullavan of "A Modern Virgin."

Then there are, too, Brandon Tynan, Isabel Irving, whose distinguished career in the theater seemed to be lost on last night's audience at the National, else she would have been welcomed with a round of applause; William Post, jr., who gives the play a fine romantic flavor, and others whose names appear above in small type, to give this welcome revival a fine savor of the theater at its best.

The story, of course, as must be known to everyone by now, is both romantic and melodramatic. There are thugs and jailbirds involved in the fable of the girl who is bequeathed to the three bachelor lovers of her mother. There is no need to recite all of that here.

My dominant thought at the moment is that "Three Wise Fools" is as engrossing entertainment now as it was 18 years ago and it is good to have William Gillette back again.

Postlude . . . .

By Ray C. B. Brown

Washington Chamber Music Society presents the Pro Musica Quartet (Bernard Robbins, Jeno Sevely, Hendrik Essers and Sidney Hamer) and Paul Garrett, clarinetist, in Phillips Memorial Gallery Monday afternoon. Program: Quartet for strings in A major (Karl Ditters), Quintet for clarinet and strings in B minor (Johannes Brahms).

Beethoven is no greater for having a "Von" in his family name, and one doubts if Karl Ditters was a better musician after he was ennobled with the title of Von Dittersdorf. Before, as well as after his acquisition of courtly rank, he was certainly a prolific and entertaining composer whose works are sadly overlooked by makers of programs, conductors of orchestras and directors of opera houses.

During his life of 60 years, he wrote copiously, with a fertile invention and a degree of originality that brought him the esteem of his contemporaries. His lines were cast in pleasant places, for he was well acquainted with Gluck and a close friend of Haydn. One likes to think of the jolly hours he spent in Vienna, playing string quartets with Mozart, Haydn and Walthal.

One was glad to hear again his quartet in A major, which contains individual and lively writing. It abounds in humor, particularly in the minuet, which is full of quips and jests. Fanciful and vital, the entire work is cast in a personal idiom. It was played by the Pro Arte foursome with plenty of spirit, although one could have wished for more suavity in the blending of tones.

The clarinet quintet of Brahms is so seldom performed that one greeted its presence with gratitude. Rich in poesy and warmed with emotional glow, it is one of the composer's most effective chamber works. The timbre of the clarinet imparts a peculiar coloration to the music, a mildly melancholic and wistful tinge. In fact, the final movement is so charged with this shadowy quality that it assumes the aspect at times of a pastoral threnody.

National Symphony Association presents the Musical Art Quartet (Sascha Jacobsen, Paul Bernard, Louis Kievman and Marie Roemaet-Rosanov), Myra Hess, piano; Hans Kindler, violoncello, and George Wargo, viola, in a concert of chamber music by Brahms in Memorial Continental Hall Monday night. Program: String Sextet in G major, String Quartet in A minor, Pianoforte Trio in C minor.

Following the memorable concert of the previous day, the National Symphony Association brought its Brahms Fest to a most satisfactory conclusion last evening with a program of chamber music admirably played by performers imbued with artistry. Not only was the occasion made exceptional by the appearance of Hans Kindler with a bow in his hand in place of the baton, but it was also signalized by the presence of Myra Hess at the piano. Moreover, the nucleus of the concert was one of the best of our American foursomes, the Musical Art Quartet, of New York.

Dr. Kindler and George Wargo joined forces with the quartet in a fine reading of the G major sextet, a work radiant with beauty. Brahms, who could be as gruff as a bear and as bristling as a porcupine, as austere as a philosopher and as boisterous as a boy, reserved his most personal disclosures for his music and his songs. The sextet is among the frankest expressions of his shy and retreating inner self.

The A minor quartet is another document to be studied closely by those who would know the essential nature of Brahms, who could confess his spiritual self only in music. It is rich in revelations of his tenderness, his generosity, and his aspirations toward unattainable perfection.

Despite the reduction to three instruments as media for expression, the pianoforte trio is remarkably eloquent of the same characteristics. It has more humor than the quartet or the sextet, but the humor is of a chastened kind that speaks in twinkles rather than in guffaws.

In exquisiteness of performance, the trio was the climax of the concert, serving to bring forth the lovely tone of Dr. Kindler's violoncello and the graciousness of Miss Hess' touch on the keys. The second movement was read with a delicacy and a fantasy rarely heard.

How many of the auditors were already devotees of room music, one does not know, but the concert should have persuaded any possible sceptics that these forms of composition have virtues possessed by no others. Their intimacy is their greatest charm, for they do not proclaim, but murmur their messages.

"Poetry is overheard," said J. S. Mill, and in that pithy remark hinted at the privilege which room music gives to apt listeners.

Reaching Slams With Asking Bids.

Although I have only recently begun to publish information on the new "asking bids" and had written nothing on the subject before I started work this year on my forthcoming complete book, the idea is not a new one with me. I had long known that the 4-5 no-trump convention, effective though it is, takes care of only 60 per cent of the possible slam hands, and that something must be devised to permit precise slam bidding on the other 40 per cent. Late in 1934 I announced that I was experimenting with certain bids which were "requests for information" and published the simplest type of this bid early in 1935, over a year ago. The asking bids now are tested and ready for expert use, and soon we all will be laughing about the inexact slam bidding methods we used for so many years.

The asking bid is used only after the partnership has definitely decided on its trump suit. After that a bid in a new suit asks for information as to whether or not partner has a singleton or a king in the new suit.

A player can make more than one asking bid on the same hand. The first asking bid, however, has located the aces; the second asking bid seeks only the second-round control, and a conventionalu no-trump response is used to show this.

(1) The jump raise in spades has established that as the trump suit. Therefore this is an asking bid. South wants to know if North has the king of diamonds, or a singleton, and also what aces North has.

(2) This shows the club ace and also guarantees that North has the diamond king (or a singleton, which for South's purpose would be just as valuable).

(3) Although South knows he can not lose a diamond trick and that North has the club ace, there still is the danger of losing a club trick to the king. Hence the second asking bid: Has North the club king, or is his club ace by any chance a singleton?

(4) The no-trump response, at the same level at which the second asking bid is made, shows second-round control. North hereby shows his club king. He would likewise have bid six no-trump had his ace been a singleton.

Knowing that the spade, club and diamond suits all are solid, and being void of hearts, South goes to seven spades. The contract is made without difficulty.

THE EIGHTH WOMAN
Why She is Always Herself

All women are not born "free and equal," Nature being what it is. Many readers of this newspaper know this to their sorrow. A woman's days are not all alike. There are difficult days when some women suffer severely.
There didn't used to be anything to do about it. Eight million had to suffer month after month. Today, a million have accepted the relief to be had from Midol.
As a rule, it is a knowing woman who keeps that little aluminum case tucked in her purse. One who knows what to wear, where to go, how to take care of herself, how to get the most out of life. That "eighth woman" who has learned to rely on Midol!
A smart woman doesn't try every pill or tablet somebody says is good for oeriodic pain. But Midol is recommended by specialists. It can form no habit because it is not a narcotic. But Midol is effective even when the pain has reached its height. It's effective for hours, so two tablets should see you comfortably through your worst day.

G. W. Defeats Geneva Five By 44-33

Kiesel Sets '36 Scoring Record by Making 19 Points.

GEORGE WASHINGTON kept its basketball winning streak unbroken last night by trouncing the fast Geneva College five, 44 to 33, at Tech High School's gymnasium. The Colonials took a lead midway in the first half and were never headed thereafter.

Hal Kiesel, G. W. center, sent a new individual scoring record for the year for Washington by dropping in seven baskets and five fouls for 19 points. Tommy O'Brien, the sophomore sensation, was a close second with 15 points.

The Pennsylvanians, conquerors of the powerful City College of New York team earlier in the season, were slow in getting started. speeded up the pace temporarily and bogged down long before the finish. G. W. led, 6 to 2, at the end of the first quarter, and 18 to 14 at half-time.

Geneva Takes Lead.

The Colonials got off to a 6-to-2 start, but Geneva came back to take a 7-to-6 lead. The advantage see-sawed from this point until Milt Schoenfield, G. W. guard, sank the basket which broke a 9-to-9 deadlock. From this point on G. W. had the upper hand.

O'Brien and Kiesel were in rare form and G. W. took a 32-to-18 lead in the later going.

Praising Foxx, Cronin Sees New Mark

By the Associated Press.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 3.—Joe Cronin, youthful manager of the Boston Red Sox, predicted today that Jimmy Foxx "would come close to if not break" Babe Ruth's American League home run record this year.

Cronin said Foxx, recent Red Sox acquisition, is "the greatest player in the game," adding:

"The set-up for Foxx to better Ruth's record of 60 is perfect. He is joining a new club under ideal conditions. I wouldn't say Jimmy was bogged down with the Athletics last year, but he had reached the stage where it was more or less of a routine."

Foxx hit 36 home runs in 1935.

"Our left-field fence is a few feet shorter than what Foxx had to aim at in Philadelphia," Cronin added. "He'll have to hit the ball a bit higher, but when he gets hold of one no fence will stop him. It is a pretty big order to ask a man to hit as many home runs as the Babe did in 1927, but I am confident Jimmy has the stuff to do it."

"After having played against Foxx over a period of years, it is my opinion he is one of the real standouts. When you consider that he can play first, third, the outfield and catch, if necessary, you must give credit to him as a truly top-notch athlete. I haven't any doubt that if I put him in to pitch he would make a creditable showing."

Enthusiastic over the acquisition, not only of Foxx but of Roger Cramer, and Heinie Manush, outfielders; Eric McNair, infielder, and Johnny Marcum, pitcher, Cronin said he hoped to have the Red Sox "up in the race from the start."

He thinks the American League tussle will be between Detroit, Cleveland, the Yankees and the Red Sox.

8-Ft.-1-In Courtman Will Oppose Heurich

The Heurich basketball board of strategy is considering moving the basket hoops up about 3 feet so that they will have a chance Sunday when they play the House of David quint in their Twenty-sixth and Water streets gym.

The reason for this proposed maneuver is the presence in the House of David line-up of Gilbert Reichert, center, who is 8 feet 1 inch in height. He weighs 365 pounds and he wears No. 23 shoes.

This Morning...

With Shirley Povich

HE IS undoubtedly a fine fellow if you know him, but—that pleasure having never been mine—this department is constrained to nominate Gloomy Gil Dobie as Horrible Example No. 1 among calamity-howling football coaches.

POVICH.

Gloomy Gil, as one naturally suspects, didn't come by his name because of a milk-and-honey disposition and a sunshine-and-flowers outlook. He set the style for pessimism among football coaches, which, stripped of its traditions, leaves it unmasked as an alibi in case of defeat.

Dobie, you remember, batted 1.000 as a tearful prophet and .000 as a football coach last season when his Cornell team failed to win a single engagement. His success as a prophet cost him his job at Cornell, which, you gather, was more than slightly surfeited with Dobie's dire predictions and is itching for a coach who could send a football team out there on the field with else than despair ringing in their ears.

I never could understand football coaches who harangued their squads with the overwhelming possibilities of defeat, which was Dobie's reputation. Knute Rockne always had a twinkle in his eye when he reflected on the possibilities of his Notre Dame teams losing, but Dobie never tempered his dire predictions.

As I was saying, football coaches who adopt a perennially pessimistic attitude, and they are a large minority, seek chiefly to equip themselves with an alibi. If they lose, they at least salvage their reputations as prophets. If they win, well, they are willing to accept victory—made more glorious by the heavy odds against which they sent their teams to the field. Boiled down, this persistent pessimism is the bunk, affording, as it does, an easy way out for the coach.

THERE is none of this hokum in professional sports. Imagine Bucky Harris or any other big league manager publicly conceding defeat before his team takes the field. The moment that kind of an utterance reached the ears of Clark Griffith, or any other club owner, there would be an ex-manager around the premises.

Professional managers and coaches are bitter-enders. As long as there is a mathematical chance to figure in the pennant, their public announcements reek with optimism. Whatever their private opinions, they are the personifications of confidence when interviewed on the subject of their ball teams.

Certainly when a manager gives up hope and concedes defeat, the fans can do no less than agree, and inasmuch as fan interest pays the freight in baseball any undermining of public confidence is little short of heresy. Football coaches are not so heavily weighed by the decline in gate receipts. If they can excuse themselves for their defeats, their jobs are safe, but a big league manager whose teams don't pack 'em in is skating on thin ice.

In Short—

Washington baseball club uniforms for 1936 will represent a slight change . . . with the conventional black "Ws" on caps and sleeves to be bordered in red . . . each uniform costs the Washington club 20 bucks, with regulars entitled to two white uniforms for home wear and two gray suits for road games . . . it will cost the club approximately $1,200 to outfit the team, despite the fact that players buy their own gloves, shoes, sweat shirts and inner socks . . . Conspicuously absent at the Catholic University Orange Bowl victory banquet last night was Chick Kenny, C. U. press agent, whose publicity efforts were directly responsible for the invitation to C. U. to play the New Year's Day game . . . The most remarkable athlete in Washington was in attendance at the Willard last night, Mike Lynch, the 53-year-old marathoner who last June competed and finished in the 26-mile Boston Marathon, in which he has started and finished nine times.

First Snow in 2 Weeks Eases Anxiety of Olympic Sledders

By the Associated Press.

GARMISCH-PARTENKIRCHEN, Germany, Feb. 3.—The tempo of this flag-bedecked Olympic village quickened before dark today when the temperature took a nose dive and thick snow, the first in nearly two weeks, began to mantle the streets and the red housetops.

With the opening of the winter Olympics only three days away and snow to be found only on the foothills of the surrounding peaks officials had begun to grow desperate. Tonight, though, even the American bobsledders, who had been sulking in their quarters like wounded bears, emerged to tramp the white carpet and listen to the music of Garmisch's numberless cafes and taverns.

Providing the cold may holds, they should be able to satisfy their craving for speed in two more days.

Providing the cold snap holds, freeze to put it in order.

The bob runners had a flock of good news for one day. Earlier in the afternoon, J. Hubert Stevens, leader of the bobsledding contingent, strongly backed by Avery Brundage, newly arrived president of the American Olympic committee, again went to bat with the bobsled committee.

When the discussion was over, Stevens had gained a definite promise that when the bobsledding begins Saturday the Americans will be riding their own sleds.

Both the German and the Swiss committeemen continued to condemn the super-sharp runners on the American sleds, but Count de la Fregeotiere, of France, head of the International Bobsled Toboggan Association, sided with Stevens.

Finally it was agreed that only in the event that it is definitely proved the American runners damage the course will they be barred.

"That's all we want, because the whole argument is silly," Stevens said.

A new and sensational sled, featuring cast-iron instead of steel runners, arrived today and will be uncrated tomorrow. It is the same type that Bob Linney drove to victory in the National (American) A. A. U. Junior Four-Man Championships at Lake Placid two weeks ago.

Stevens intends to drive the new sled himself and confidently predicts it will "knock the spots off the course record. Since it has been impossible to hold trials, the American squad also gained permission from Olympic authorities to make substitutions in its line-ups up to the last minute, "even on the starting line."

Due to the scarcity of snow, the American girl skiers were kept off the down-hill course and had to content themselves with cross-country workouts. The down-hill layout, which drops dizzily 800 meters through thick woods, is not considered safe.

The American girls don't expect to win this time, but feel they are gaining valuable experience studying rivals like Christel Cranz, who is counted by the knowing as the fifth best skier in Germany, regardless of sex.

Mrs. Norton to Aid in Plans; Yanchulis Is Voted Award.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

IN a candle-lit setting of California oranges, comely women, red-faced alumni scrambling to get aboard the band wagon, long-winded speakers, distinguished guests from Capitol Hill and various other citizens, Catholic University's 1935 football team, greatest in the school's history, received a big pat on its collective back last night at the third annual Cardinal gridiron banquet.

Featuring the addresses from the speakers' dais at the Willard Hotel, where 1,000 persons had gathered, was the announcement by Congresswoman Mary T. Norton, chairman of the House District Committee, that she "would work for" a huge municipal stadium for the District.

Absence Is Deplored.

Mrs. Norton's announcement followed an address by Congressman Hamilton Fish, who pointed out the lack of athletic facilities in the Capital and deplored the absence of a stadium sufficiently large to accommodate classic contests.

After reading a prepared address of congratulation to the Catholic U. team, Mrs. Norton declared her vital interest in sports and gave her full approval to the movement for a stadium here.

Joe Yanchulis, a paragon of modesty and one of seven youths of Lithuanian descent honored with scrolls by the Minister of Lithuania, was awarded the "outstanding player" award of the year. Hermie Schmarr, giant end and one of the squad's most popular men, was elected captain of the 1936 eleven.

Yanchulis Is Stunned.

Yanchulis couldn't have been more dumfounded by Coach "Dutch" Bergman's announcement had he been floored with a sledgehammer. He shuffled up to the speaker's table half-apologetically to receive the reward. Bergman's selection was the best he could have made and extremely popular with the squad.

But the address of the Most Rev. P. J. McCormick, acting rector of Catholic University, was not wholly encouraging to the continued progress of the school's sports program, nor did he wax over-enthusiastic about developing top-notch football elevens.

Representative Doxey Speaks.

Representative Wall Doxey, of Mississippi, representing "Ole Miss" for the evening, congratulated the Cards on their victory over his alma mater, and then invited them to Mississippi's victory celebration after the teams meet again next October.

Bergman presented each member of the squad with gold footballs after retiring Capt. Ed Karpowich had handed a lighted torch to Capt.-elect Schmarr in a dramatic climax to the banquet. He was, in turn, presented with an engraved scroll signed by members of the Alumni and football squad, to which was attached a gold football, the gift of his players.

Columbus, Miss., Feb. 3 (AP).—A week of bad weather resulted today in postponement of the twenty-third annual trials of the national field trial clubs.

Dobie Named As Coach at Boston C.

Signs 2-Year Contract After Quitting Cornell Under Pressure.

By the Associated Press.

NEWTON, Mass., Feb. 3.—Youth was crowded out by an aging veteran today when Boston College launched a new football era by engaging Gilmour (Gloomy Gil) Dobie as head coach.

The 57-year-old gridiron pessimist, forced to resign at Cornell after serving 16 years, succeeds Harry Downes, whose playing career ended only four seasons ago.

Dobie quit Cornell under heavy alumni pressure, which was also responsible for Downes' failure to gain reappointment. The latter who joined the B. C. staff as line coach in 1934, took command of the squad at the halfway mark of the last campaign, when John R. (Dinnie) McNamara's health forced him to resign his head coachship.

Called at Once.

Influenced by alumni sentiment, the B. C. athletic committee delayed filling the football position until Saturday, when Dobie became available. That veteran, whose "big red" teams were the scourge of the Eastern intercollegiate gridirons during the early years of the last decade, was called by John P. Curley, B. C.'s athletic director, as soon as it became known he was through at Ithaca.

Dobie, whose Cornell contract had two years to run, accepted Curley's offer of a two-year contract over the telephone. No terms were mentioned but a $10,000 salary was hinted by persons close to Boston College's athletic affairs. If that is true, Dobie will be one of the highest paid coaches in the game, for he was reported to have accepted a financial settlement to surrender his Cornell contract.

McKenney Resigned.

Dobie will be the first prominent career coach Boston College has had since it was at its peak under the late Maj. Frank Cavanaugh. When he moved on to Fordham, Boston College resumed its graduate coaching policy and appointed Joe McKenney, who resigned in favor of McNamara about a year ago.

Equipped with a promising freshman squad, Boston College has arranged one of the most difficult schedules in its football history. The announcement of the 1936 list, which includes games with Temple, Michigan State, North Carolina State, Western Maryland and Holy Cross, caused many influential graduates to demand the appointment of a "big name" coach.

New York, Feb. 3 (AP).—Gilmour Dobie found employment at Boston College today, but Cornell University faced difficulty finding a football coach to replace him.

In their quest for "the best man available," Cornell's athletic authorities found volunteers covering a wide range of possibilities but a limited list of "desirable" prospects.

The ranks of unemployed coaches with substantial experience is small. The group includes Dick Hanley, formerly of Northwestern, and Ted Cox, recently replaced at Tulane by Lowell (Red) Dawson, Minnesota backfield coach. Hanley is understood to be well satisfied with the insurance business and not interested for the time being in a return to college coaching. Herb McCracken, who ended a long term as Lafayette's head coach last season, also has decided to devote his entire time to business interests.

In some quarters it has been suggested that it might be necessary to draft George Pfann, former All-America quarterback at Cornell under Dobie, to take temporary charge of spring practice, if delay is encountered in filling the head coaching post. Pfann, an Assistant United States District Attorney here has been coaching Swarthmore's football squad. He also is a member of Cornell's committee on athletics.

U. S. to Play Mexico In Davis Cup Opener

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, Feb. 3.—The United States and Mexico, which met in the finals of North American zone competition a year ago, were matched against each other today in the first round of 1936 Davis Cup tennis play.

Cuba and Australia, the other challengers in the American zone, will play for the right to meet the winner of the Mexican-United States match.

These pairings and those in the first round of European zone competition were determined today. The draw was made in the Mansion House by the lord mayor, Sir Percy Vincent. The American representative was Capt. Walter Anderson, naval attache of the American Embassy here.

Dates Are Assigned.

At the same time dates were assigned for the inter-zone final, between the winners of the American and European zones, and the challenge round with Great Britain defending the cup against the survivor of interzone competition.

All European competition will be completed by July 13. The interzone final has been scheduled for July 18, 20 and 21, and the challenge round for July 25, 27 and 28, both at Wimbledon.

Seventeen of the 23 nations in the European zone drew first-round byes. The pairings of the others follow: Monaco versus the Netherlands, China versus France, and Spain versus the highly fancied German team. Rumania withdrew its entry at the last minute.

Although the United States played in Mexico City last year and it now is Mexico's turn to cross the border, it was considered likely in official circles that this year's matches also would be played in the Mexican capital.

The 1935 Mexican team, featuring Donald Budge and "Bitsy" Grant, trounced the Mexican forces four matches to one, playing before large galleries. American tennis officials figure the series would draw a larger "gate" in Mexico than in any American city.

May Vie in Havana.

The Cuban Lawn Tennis Federation probably will invite Australia to compete in Havana, where the two nations met in 1932 when the invaders handed the home forces a 5-0 whitewashing.

The United States and Australia will be heavy favorites in the preliminary round. With their survival regarded as a foregone conclusion, the United States Lawn Tennis Association already is reported to be arranging for the American final either at the Merion Cricket Club or the Germantown Club in Philadelphia.

Only Two Clubs to Sponsor Invitation Golf Tourneys in '36

Skimpy Card For Season Listed

Manor Awarded District Championship; West Named President.

By Dave Herman.

A SKIMPY schedule, perhaps the most disappointing in many a year, was announced last night at the annual meeting of the District Golf Association at the Racquet Club.

As expected, Manor Club was awarded the District championship, with dates to be set by the executive committee.

Keen was the disappointment when only two clubs—Chevy Chase and Washington Golf and County Club—definitely stated they would sponsor invitation tournaments. Chevy Chase accepted the dates of May 12-13-14-15, while tentative dates of May 5-6-7-8 were assigned Washington.

Congressional Dates.

Congressional Country Club was listed for October 13-14-15-16, but it is doubtful if the club will hold an invitation, since no representative was present at the meeting.

Two other clubs, Columbia and Belle Haven, reported they could not stage invitations. Both had been assigned dates at a previous meeting of the executive committee.

The District Junior championship will be played at Woodmont Country Club, June 23-24-25, while the District Mixed Scotch Foursome championship, inaugurated last year, will take place September 30 at Columbia.

Martin R. (Marty) West, Columbia golf chairman, was elected president, succeeding Tom Belshe, of Indian Spring. Maj. Kendall J. Fielder, of Army-Navy, slated for the presidency but unable to accept due to his duties at Fort Meade, Md., was named first vice president, and James A. Cosgrove, of Manor, was selected as second vice president. Dr. William C. Barr, of Washington, was re-elected secretary-treasurer, and Belshe, Al Steinem, of Woodmont, and Dr. Bruce L. Taylor, of Congressional, named on the executive committee.

Delegates are Named.

The most exciting news coming out of the meeting was the decision to send two delegates to the annual session of the United States Golf Association in New York. West will be one of the delegates.

Cosgrove, who made the suggestion to have some representation on the U. S. G. A., also said his proposal to have all clubs take a poll of their members with respect to the stymie go through with a favorable vote. Thus, as soon as the members vote, the clubs will report to the association, which in turn will report to the U. S. G. A.

An attempt will be made by the association to break up the practice of suspended and expelled caddies going from one club to another, and the association also voted to discourage the bringing of caddies from one course to another, save in the case of pros who have their special caddies, and in the case of tournaments in which outside caddies are needed.

Western High Meets Tech Five Today

	Won.	Lost.	Pct.
Eastern	6	0	1.000
Western	3	3	.500
Roosevelt	2	3	.400
Central	1	3	.250
Tech	1	4	.200

By John R. Vosburgh.

NOW that Eastern has its interhigh championship No. 3-in-a-row stowed away, Western is stepping prominently into the forefront of the interhigh race today with an intensive drive for second place. A strengthened Tech team will be the formidable obstacle in the Georgetowner's path when action starts at the Tech gymnasium at 3:45 p. m.

At the same time, Central and Roosevelt, both hoping Tech will stop the gyrating Georgetowners, will meet at Roosevelt. The chief objective of this conflict will be to retain a fighting chance for second place.

Should Tech beat Western and Central beat Roosevelt, the scramble for the runner-up honors will be more confusing than a political convention. A victory for Western, however, would give the Georgetowners a mighty boost toward the No. 2 rung with only a victory over Central, Friday, needed to clinch it.

Western Favored.

On the record, Western reigns a favorite to stop Tech. The latter, however, will feature the reappearance of Tommy Dobyns, regular center, who has been on the sidelines for the last two games Tech has played. Coach Rusty Thompson believes his young "find" has recovered sufficiently from a strained muscle to see action again.

Coach Cliff Moore of Western, whose team last year upset preseason dope by plunging to second place, probably will start his usual array of Capt. Gerald Burns, his sharp-shooting forward; Gene Daly, Paul Borden, Hop Lomax and Harry Wells or George DeWitt. This combination took Tech's measure in the first meeting between the schools, 30 to 27.

Out For Revenge.

The techmen figure the 3-point loss could well have gone the other way. With Dobyns back in shape, Walton Merchant, Jimmy Vermillion, Bill Rea, Capt. George Hahn, Mike Italiano and Horace Lowe are striking out to balance the account.

Central, flushed with the fact that it gave Eastern its toughest battle of the season, losing by but 5 points, oddly enough on the record at least, should go into the Roosevelt game on the short end of the odds. The Rough Riders subdued the Raymen, 30 to 18, in the first game but the weakened Roosevelt team scarcely rates more than an even choice today.

JOHNNY POSTON.

Johnny Poston One of Stars In Tourney

WHEN the District A. A. U. basketball tournament sponsored by The Washington Post, opens on February 18, at Heurich's gym, one of the bright stars in the Lilliputian class will be Johnny Poston, graduate of Eastern High School.

Johnny has the distinction of being the lightest, smallest, yet oldest player in the 115-pound division.

Captain of the Boys' Club, of Washington Americans, which last year won the 100-pound A. A. U. championship at Tech High, Poston is just a bit over 5 feet, tips the scales at 106 pounds. He will be 20 years old on February 21—three days after the opening of The Post's games.

In Games Three Years.

Johnny has been playing basketball only three years, but he has made remarkable strides. Last season he led his Americans to victory in 32 out of 33 games, and this year his team is undefeated in 15 games.

"I'm fast growing, and putting on weight," said the kid star, who was assistant manager of Eastern's great championship basketball team in 1934-35. "Why two years ago when I played with the team I weighed 91, and was 4 feet 10. Last season I was 5 feet and my weight jumped to 93."

As guard on the Boys Club Americans, he has been the leading scorer. Others on the team who will have graduated from the 100-pound class to the 115-pound division are Mel Shewbridge and Bob Cannon, forwards; Bob Nicely, center, who is nearly a foot taller than little Poston; Hymie Perlow, Carroll Hall and Sidney Shulman, guards, and Sam Gendleman, forward.

Entry blanks in the 100-pound, 115-pound, 130-pound, 145-pound, men's and girls' unlimited, are available at The Post sports department, Spaldings, Treman-King and the Boys Club of Washington, 230 C street, where the entries should be sent.

Rockville Wins 3d Place By Defeating Sherwood

Rockvile High School took undisputed possession of third place among the Montgomery County schools yesterday by hanging a 35-to-28 defeat on Sherwood High, a late rally led by Gene Ochsenreiter, scoring champion, accounting for the victory. The game was played at Rockville.

Terps' Chances of Capturing A Single Ring Title Seen Slim

VIRGINIA'S victory over Maryland's ringmen last Saturday, although not wholly unexpected, only serves to bolster our earlier suspicions that the Terrapins are not only destined to remain firmly embedded in the conference tourney rank and file the latter part of this month, but, moreover, that they have only a slim chance at best of capturing a single title.

Then, too, on a basis of their performances against the Terps it would appear from my corner that Virginia's days as ruler of the conference are numbered, and that the approaching tournament will see the clouting Cavaliers dethroned for the first time in years. It may be that the apt pupils of Johnny LaRowe, who, incidentally, was unable to accompany the team because of illness, were victims of a let-down that naturally would follow their decisive victory over North Carolina a week before but they didn't show me enough to warrent their selection as championship stuff.

You can throw out Maynard Womer's loss to Ivan Nedomatsky in the 145-pound class. I thought that was a pretty terrible decision Womer got when Nedomatsky was wholly exhausted at the finish and had failed to hurt his opponent after the first round. The Virginia boy, who said he felt that Nedomatsky deserved the victory, wasn't in the best condition for boxing. Neither was Ivan.

But what we're getting at is that Womer is right at home in the 145-pound class and the Maryland boy, who is the conference lightweight champion, doesn't appear to be capable of handling the larger lads as well as he did last season when it was a rare feat to get beyond the first round with him. Nedomatsky hasn't slipped in our opinion, although there is none to deny that he has slowed up considerably; he merely is getting tougher and more experienced opponents who don't fold up when hit with that left hook. I doubt if he can whip the likes of Danny Farrar, Duke, or if he'll get the nod over Womer should they meet again.

Looking over the Terp line-up from Charley Gebhardt, 115-pounder, to Johnny Birkland, heavyweight, I can't see a potential champion unless it should be Johnny Gormley, light-heavyweight. Gormley, who was the victim of a trick decision Saturday, is fast and can hit on occasion although usually is too intent on getting away from his man after scoring with a left jab, to inflict any real damage. He may develop, but it must be at a rapid pace if he hopes to take any of the better men in his class.

I've been intending to get on record for some time, now, about the merits of George Washington's basketball team. It appears to be the best in town. I say it is the best, but I give it only a shade over Georgetown, which, I think, will blossom into a topnotch quintet next winter. Right now, however, there isn't a thing in this vicinity capable of stopping the Colonials, and I predict that Bill Reinhart's men will upset St. John's, of Brooklyn, when the two meet the latter part of this month.

The strong Landon team trailed all the way, never drawing closer to the winners than 3 points, Georgetown Prep leading, 11-8, at one point in the first half.

The home tea widened the advantage to 17-11 by half-time, however, and never relinquished it.

G. U. Leaves to Meet Canisius In Warm-Up for N.Y.U. Game

STILL smiling, despite a brace of tough reversals last week, and as determined as a corps of insurance salesmen, Georgetown's happy warriors were off to the court wars again last night, this time headed for Buffalo and a game with Canisius that will feature a basketball carnival tonight in the northern New York village.

But the Canisius lads, as tough as they are when rigged out in basketball uniforms, are the least of Georgetown's current worries. The most baffling problem confronting Coach Fred Mesmer and his men is New York University's impending invasion of Washington. The visitors meet Georgetown Friday night at Tech High School in the most attractive game booked in town this winter.

Unbeaten This Season.

New York is a problem for any team, as its record for the last two years and current season—45 victories and 1 defeat—eloquently attests. Thus far this winter the Violet has yet to lose, and if Georgetown can pull the unexpected, its fame will be more durable than Copley Hall.

The Gotham gang is one of the entire country's most prolific scoring teams, having made 505 points in 11 games for an average of approximately 46 points a game. Georgetown's average for nine games is approximately 34, thus the Hilltoppers are whipped before the start—on scoring percentages.

Mesmer accepted tonight's game, which was booked only two weeks ago, as a warm-up for Friday's feature, figuring that a good, stiff game will put the team on edge for the Violet. Although Georgetown hopes to win tonight, the outcome will be of little consequence if Mesmer's purpose is served.

Central High Riflists Score Over Staunton

Central High's rifle team won its second straight match of the season yesterday, defeating Staunton Military Academy, 1270 to 1204, in telegraphic competition. Central defeated Roosevelt High in a non-interhigh game earlier in the season by 150 points.

Capt. Ray Hodges, with a score of 271, led the Central shooters. Other scores: Robert Lockwood, 263; Wilber Sze, 256; Waters, 240, and Margolf, 240.

Polish Beau Beats Ladfield at Hialeah

Gelding Sets Early Pace To Win

Sailor Beware Is Third; Daily Double Returns $12.20 Mutuel.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

HIALEAH RACE TRACK, Feb. 3.—Polish Beau, a gelded son of Polymelian, did the expected today when he went to the front soon after the start of the Venetian Handicap, but he did the unexpected when he lasted to take a half-length decision from the favored Ladfield. Believed to be short on speed and small of heart, Polish Beau forgot his quitting tactics as Jockey Longden's whip plied on his flank and ran perhaps the best race of his career. He was clocked in the creditable time of 1:11. Four lengths behind the battle for first honors came Sailor Beware, to be third in the field of six.

Sailor Beware was ridden by Jockey Joe Wagner, who was making his first saddle start since a severe attack of pneumonia, which he developed at Bowie last fall. For a few fleeting seconds it appeared that Wagner might ride a winner at the first asking. His mount from the Greentree Stable hopped to the front at the break. However, Polish Beau was soon setting the pace. Turning for the stretch, Polish Beau opened a long lead and Ladfield, off none to well, began a drive that was to fall short.

Ladfield Rallies.

Ladfield came with leaps and bounds in the straightaway and the anticipated collapse of Polish Beau failed to materialize.

Owned by W. E. Stroube, Polish Beau ran in the colors of the Corsicana Stable, named for the proprietor's home town in Texas. The gelding paid a $6.40 mutuel, a price that was something of a theme song for the day. The two horses that figured in the daily double paid a like amount in the individual betting.

The double was a balancing of the budget for a large percentage of those who wager in the combinations. Balanced Budget supplied the first half, with Bar Nothing, a tip from the Bradley Stable, the completing half of a $29.50 mutuel.

The Long Key Purse proved a romp for G. H. (Pete) Bostwick's Mont Blanc. The imported colt went to the front entering the stretch and then drew away from Don Creole to be credited with a two-length victory. Rosselli was third. Chancer, which set the early pace, wound up in sixth place. Mont Blanc paid a $12.20 mutuel.

Two Big Rassle Scraps Due Thursday

Yvon Robert Will Share Spotlight With Newcomer, Koverly.

VIRTUALLY two main bouts will be afforded Washington wrestling fans, Thursday night when Joe Turner conducts his weekly rendition of rassling refinement.

According to advance information of the mat, Yvon Robert, unofficial victor over Danno O'Mahoney, and official conqueror of Jim Browning, Ed Don George and Joe Savoldi, will be forced to share the spotlight with a newcomer, George Koverly.

George, who hails from some points in the Middle West, is billed as a sensation. He had the fans in Baltimore and Philadelphia in the aisles cheering at his unusual tactics described as fiery, slam-bang and aggressive.

A Lithuanian by extraction, George is considered by some the best looking wrestler among the heavyweights, which is expected to swell the number of women spectators in the audience. Koverly will wrestle Dean Detton in the semi-final prior to the match between Mike Mazurki and Yvon Robert.

With Detton already one of the hits of the winter season here, having wrestled Joe Cox to a pair of devastating draws, the Koverly-Detton attraction gives the entire program a decided uplift in quality.

It will take quite a match, however, to dim the super qualities of the Robert-Mazurki affair which tops the bill. There are many who believe Mr. Robert will have Mazurki in short order but that remains to be seen.

Delaney Defeats Lipps in Bout Here

as he raked the Buffalo lad with three hard left hooks to the head.

It was stormy weather for Delaney in the sixth, as Joe seemed able to pelt him about almost at will, but apparently didn't will to hit him often enough to send him to the floor. The steam was gone from Delaney's wallops and Joe still was hitting as hard as ever, but he just couldn't apply the finishing touches.

Joe posed instead of carrying the fight to Delaney in the eighth round, and that posing and failure to take the lead cost him any chance he might have had to get a draw, which he might have earned had he really battered Al in the finale.

Lipps weighed 175½ pounds, Delaney, 180.

Sam Chernoff, a New York lightweight, punched his way to a split decision over Ray Ingram, of Washington, in a good six-round semi-final. Sammy bounced in and out with both hands flying to earn the decision by outspeeding and outboxing his opponent throughout.

Ben Brown, a newcomer from Atlanta, made an auspicious debut into Capital ring society by scoring a third round technical knockout over Tony Livingston, of Quantico. The Marine middleweight was dropped three times in the first three rounds and was unable to answer the bell for the fourth.

Tommy Hoover took a unanimous decision from Jesse James in a four round preliminary and in a opener scheduled for four, Bearcat Wright scored a second round knockout over King Kong, another colored heavyweight.

Spears, Cue Dean, Will Appear Here

George Spears, dean of the professional billiard instructors, will make four appearances in Washington this week. On Friday he will demonstrate his skill at the Earle Billiard Parlor, 403 Eleventh street, at 4:30 p. m., and at the Royal Billiard Academy, 817 Fourteenth street, at 7:45 p. m.

Saturday Spears will appear at George's Parlors, 1431½ B street southeast, at 10 p. m., and next Tuesday he will show at the Arcade, Fourteenth street and Park road, at 7:30 p. m.

Spears has been playing billiards for some 45 years. Born in Shelby, Mich., in 1871, he won the Michigan State pocket billiards championship at the age of 16. For some reason, he has never entered world championship competition, apparently being well satisfied to confine his efforts to match games, exhibitions and the teaching of the game.

Rally by Howard Beats Virginians

With Art Carter on the tossing end of a Garrison finish, by the foul route, Howard University defeated Virginia State, of Petersburg, last night on the university court, 35 to 34.

The Virginians led at the half by 8 points, 23-15, and extended their lead to 34-25, with four minutes to play. It was at this point that the Bisons staged one of the most remarkable rallies seen on the university court.

Herbie Jones caged a foul shot. Paris Hampton followed with a looper, and Bill Brown tossed in two free ones. "Boot" Williams tilted the ball in from under the basket edge, and Hampton delivered a high one from among the rafters to tie the score at 34-all.

2 New Records Are Set by Pinmen

A VOLLEY of crack maple-shooting and high scores galore featured continuation of activities in the hotly contested Federal League last night at the Arcadia alleys, the result being two new season marks.

Astor Clarke, the ace bowler of the city, furnished the individual fireworks. With but 98 sticks in his first game, Clarke hit for games of 161 in his second and third attempts for a record three-game set of 420. Investigation profited by Clarke's scores to the extent of two victories over Public Schools, dropping the first game in which Clarke gave little assistance.

Toppling the maples for a season record game of 651 and an 1,813 set, G. P. O. bettered its standing with two victories over Veterans' Bureau. I. R. E. W. were successful in retaining the lead in the race, gained last week, by an odd-game decision over Navy Yard. National Capital Park pulled up in a contending position by swamping I. C. C., and Highway lost ground when it was upset twice by the G. P. O. (Union Printers).

Ralph (Monk) Frasier, popular Arcadia manager, is starting the ball rolling in the first of a series of city-wide preliminary events for the "Red" Megaw sweepstakes, which will be rolled on February 15.

The first preliminary will take place at the Arcadia at the conclusion of activity in the Columbia Heights League. Three games will be rolled at a cost of $1.60 per entry. For each eight entries participating, a free entry to the main event will be awarded. The fee includes cost of games rolled.

The Orientals continued to exert its supremacy over the Procurement League last night at the Recreation drives, sweeping the last-place Tudors with a 551-game and 1,551-set. Individual laurels were captured by F. Donaldson, of the pace-setters, with a 136 game and 378 set.

"Buss" Prevost (Hydrographic) hung up a new season individual set record in the Navy Department League last night at Arcadia, chipping the maples for a three-game total of 403. McElroy (Barracks), aided by a 152 game, totaled 399 for the second high set of the season. Hydrographic's 611 game and Navigation's 1,721 set were the best team scores.

Guard Boxing Show Set for Tomorrow

The District National Guard Athletic Association will hold another amateur boxing show at the Armory tomorrow night. A team selected from boxers representing the National Guard, Olympic Club, Marine Reserves and a few unattached fighters will meet a hand-picked team from Richmond.

Among those competing will be several stars of the recent Golden Gloves tournament, including Danny DeRosa, Bob Mathias, Lou Gevinson, George Pickerel and Don Stetson.

Wants Game Tonight.

The Washington Canoe Club basketball team is seeking a game for tonight with an unlimited team, to be played in the Gordon Junior High gymnasium at 9 p. m. Call Ed Trilling, Cleveland 6034, between 4:30 and 6:30 p. m.

Van Sweringen Realty Firm Files Petition

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Feb. 3.—The Real Estate Holding Co., which gave the Van Sweringen brothers, Oris P. and the late Mantis J., their start in the financial world, obtained Federal court permission today to file reorganization plans under section 77-B of the Federal bankruptcy act.

The Van Sweringen company and six wholly owned subsidiaries in their petition listed book assets of $44,393,031 and liabilities of $31,962,128. Judge Paul Jones named Referee in Bankruptcy William B. Woods special master to hear the reorganization plan.

A company statement said over two-thirds of the holders of $8,219,600 in collateral mortgage trust bonds issued by the Van Sweringen company in 1925 and 1928 have approved the concern's revised plans. The petition said "an immediate or forced sale of assets would result in great losses to shareholders and other creditors."

Shaker Heights Holdings.

The parent company's holdings are located largely in Shaker Heights, an exclusive residential suburb converted from farm land through the initiative of the Van Sweringen Brothers while they were still in their twenties.

Lack of transportation facilities caused veteran real estate dealers to shy from the Shaker Heights development. The Van Sweringens purchased the property and then guranteed rights of way and the first five years' interest on the cost of extensions to the Cleveland Railway Co.

The property after the railway company built street car lines increased in value from $240,000 in 1910 to over $30,000,000 in later years.

This success brought the former obscure country boys into the realm of high finance, and resulted in their becoming the largest private railroad operators in the United States, controlling over 21,000 miles of road valued at $3,000,000,000.

Netherlands Reduces Discount Rate to 2½%

Amsterdam, The Netherlands, Feb. 3 (AP).—The Bank of The Netherlands today lowered its discount rate from 3 per cent to 2½ per cent, as of tomorrow.

The reduction is due to easy monetary conditions and the continued influx of gold.

Deere and Woolen Report Big Gains

New York, Feb. 3 (AP).—American Woolen Co. of New York today reported a 1935 net profit of $2,740,598, after charges, depreciation, taxes, etc., compared with net loss of $5,458,494 in 1934. Directors declared a quarterly dividend of $1 on account of accumulations on the preferred stock, payable March 16 to stock of record February 20. The last payment was $1.25 on July 16, 1934.

Deere & Co. of Moline, Ill., manufacturers of farm implements, reports for 1935 net profit of $8,105,452, equal, after preferred dividend requirements, to $3.91 a share on the common. This compares with $379,734, or 24 cents a share on the preferred stock, in 1934.

January Dividends.

New York, Feb. 3.—Favorable dividend changes in January totaled 203, according to the Standard Statistics Co. This figure is seasonally lower than the December total of 329 but is 50 per cent higher than the January, 1935, figure of 136. Unfavorable changes in January numbered 9, against 15 in December, and 25 in January, 1935.

Mutual Life Assets Grow $78,529,913

New York, Feb. 3.—In an annual letter to policyholders marking the ninety-third anniversary of the issuing of its first policy, President David F. Houston, of the Mutual Life Insurance Co., of New York, states that the assets of the company on December 31, 1935, were $1,239,039,565, an increase over 1934 of $78,529,913; that, during 1935, the Mutual Life paid policyholders and their beneficiaries a total of $138,591,009 and that, since 1843, it has paid to policyholders and their beneficiaries or accumulated for them benefits of $4,818,922,566, which is $580,656,543 more than was received in premiums.

New insurance amounting to $266,097,986 was issued, an increase of $13,132,815 over 1934, and the company's outstanding insurance at the close of the year was $3,708,081,401. Mr. Houston adds:

"It is interesting to note that the total insurance outstanding in the world was about $144,000,000,000. Of this amount the people of the United States, constituting only 6 per cent of the world's population, had, it was estimated, $98,600,000,000, or more than double the amount outstanding in all the rest of the world; and the admitted assets of the old-line legal reserve companies in the United States was, approximately $21,800,000,000. These figures are striking, but they are only in line with what the people of the United States have accomplished in other directions.

22 Billions in Savings.

"They had deposits in savings banks of $22,652,000,000 as against, approximately, $19,000,000,000 for 15 leading European nations with a population of 300,000,000. They had $9,116,000,000 gold reserves, as compared with $11,200,000,000 held by the central reserve banks and governments of 14 other leading nations, or over 44 per cent of the world's total. Of the farms and crop land harvested in 1930, over 58 per cent was owned. Of the 25,205,000 families of the Nation, in that year, over 14,000,000 or 46.8 per cent owned their own homes and others could have owned homes, but preferred to rent. Of the rural families, 12,532,000, 52½ per cent owned their homes. Our people own, approximately, 71 per cent of the automobiles of the world, over 44 per cent of the radio sets, 52 per cent of the telephones and 39 per cent of the railroads. They carried on 60 per cent of the world's telephone conversations and sent 68 per cent of the world's telegrams. And, further, a matter of the utmost significance, they expended more on education than all the rest of the world for which statistics were available."

Industrial Favorites Lead Stocks Higher; Governments Bonds and Dollars Lower.

New York, Feb. 3.—Stocks closed higher on an afternoon rally that nevertheless left a good sprinkling of small losses and failed to bring out a turnover of more than two and a quarter million shares. The day was marked by a strong rise in sterling and the gold currencies against the dollar with an outward shipment of gold arranged, further decline in United States Government bonds, and disappointment over the failure of the Supreme Court to decide its important public utility case. May wheat closed ¾ of a cent lower at 99½ cents a bushel.

Stocks jolted along with small advances and declines evenly divided and with turnover small until the noon hour. After it was announced that the Supreme Court would put over for at least another week its decision on the TVA case, a load seemed to have been lifted from trading. Vigor appeared, both in volume of dealings and in bid prices. Bullish operations centered in the steel, electrical manufacturing, rubber and motor groups.

Doughty Dozen.

Sharpest gains of the day were made in less than a dozen assorted industrial issues. The list included Allis Chalmers, American Can, Anchor Cap, Borg Warner, Hayes Body, Cleveland Graphite, National Cash Register, Westinghouse, United Drug, General Electric, Union Tank and Spiegel May Stern. Those stocks moved up 1 to more than 5 points. On the reverse side, Owens Glass lost more than 3 points. Radio felt much selling pressure and a list of preferred stocks dropped 2 to 4 points, including Abraham & Straus, Foreign Power, Endicott Johnson, General Realty, Paramount first, and Republic Steel prior.

Foods were mixed. National Biscuit rallied a point, after sinking into new low ground in the early trading. Chemicals and amusements were mostly lower. Utilities were narrow and lacked robustness. Rails also fell into that classification. Farm shares were strong. Metals and oils worked higher. Airplane stocks had a quiet day. Douglas rose a little.

Inflation or Taxation.

Markets began with expectation of a much delayed decision by the Supreme Court in the Tennessee Valley Authority utility case, and with conflicting opinions on the possibility of inflationary measures to be shoved through Congress as a substitute for taxation to provide soldiers' bonus and possibly farmers' bonus funds. Should the inflation group of Congressmen succeed in any of their schemes to pay bonus with further depreciation of the dollar, with the use of the gold "profit," or by the printing of greenbacks, a considerable disturbance in the markets would be likely.

The country might, as some optimistic observers dare to say, be strong enough to absorb such a dose of inflation; but the fear would run high that a mere beginning had been made. Even on the taxation side, the prospect for a tax bill to raise a half billion to a billion dollars is not one to be regarded with equanimity by individuals and business men. However, it might give reassurance to the Government bond market.

On another side the tax outlook is obscure. That is the proposal to reestablish retroactive taxes for farm benefits, and that prospect naturally will tend to hold down activity in the textile and food industries until the matter is settled. Industrially the week began with a firmer tone in heavy industries. The steel trade, according to the estimate of the American Iron and Steel Institute, will operate this week at 50 per cent of capacity, compared with 49.4 per cent last week. This week will therefore mark the termination of a three weeks' period of comparative slackness. A year ago the operating rate was 52.8 per cent. If gains in steel this month prove to be large, optimism over a spring rise in business will have been justified.

Gold Exports.

If the inflationary forces at work are arousing no great emotions in this country, that scarcely is true of foreigners. Dollars continue weak in foreign exchange trading. Their decline today was marked, and early in the day word was had of the first engagements of gold for export that have been made since 1934. For the ultimate stability of the dollar, and for the maintenance of a least the appearance of a gold backing for our currency, it is reassuring to know that the Treasury has consented to the release of gold for export.

Gold is not needed to settle unfavorable trade balances, unless silver be considered as commodity imports. Our exports of other merchandise have exceeded our imports. However, the balance is the other way around, counting the silver purchased abroad. It may look queer to some people to see this country shipping abroad its gold in order to pay for foreign silver, which it does not need. Fortunately, we do not need the gold either, but the process of paying over good money for a useless commodity will do the country's credit little good; rather, it encourages the drive for inflation among those with a silver currency complex.

Effect on Markets.

Strictly speaking, much of the gold held by the Treasury does not belong to us. It merely represents foreign capital that has come to this country, drawn by the supposedly greater safety of the dollar and by the revival in our markets. Its removal will hold foreign countries desirous of returning to or staying on gold, and that also will diminish the base on which an enormous credit inflation could be built up here.

From a market standpoint the danger is that any large scale export of gold might be followed by considerable withdrawal of foreign funds invested in our markets. That in turn might promote a flight of domestic capital, with consequent press for sale of securities on the markets.

Have Plenty.

In September and August, 1934, there was a modest export movement of gold from this country to France, but it stopped after about $23,000,000 had been shipped. With the franc across the gold-shipping point again, a new movement to Paris was reported to have started, but the amount which will be shipped will be in direct relation to the weakness in the dollar which is created by inflationist activities in Congress. One of the curious things in connection with the value of the dollar in foreign exchange is that almost all the vicious attacks upon it have as their chief foundation developments in Washington. This country would have to lose a lot of gold to make much of a dent in the pile which has come here since January, 1931, when the dollar was devalued. Most of the $3,100,000,000 gain since then has come from abroad.

Institute Estimates Steel Activity at 50%

New York, Feb. 3 (AP).—The American Iron and Steel Institute estimated today that operations of the steel industry for this week will be 50 per cent of capacity, compared with 49.4 per cent last week, an increase of .6 of 1 per centage point.

A month ago operations were at 49.2 per cent of capacity and a year ago at 52.8 per cent.

This figure, which included dividends received from the company's investment in General Motors Corporation equal to $2.03 a share on the du Pont common stock, compares with $40,475,030, or $3.66 a common share in 1934, which included dividends from General Motors equivalent to $1.36 in each share of du Pont stock.

Figures for both years include du Pont company's equity in undivided profits or losses of controlled companies not wholly owned.

The net income of $62,085,410, after Federal taxes and interest on bonds of subsidiary companies, compared with $46,701,465 in 1934.

After deducting Federal taxes on this profit there remained $3,353,664. An addition of $3,325,000 to reserve for contingencies was set aside out of 1935 earnings.

Income from operations was $40,716,924, compared with $30,290,622 in 1934. Income from investment was $31,133,882, which includes $8,636,162 income from marketable securities. Investment in controlled companies not wholly owned, and $22,497,720 from the investment in General Motors.

The volume of business of the du Pont company and its wholly owned subsidiaries amounted to about $220,000,000, the report states, an increase over 1934 of approximately 19 per cent.

During 1935, the report states, the company spent approximately $23,400,000 in extending and modernizing its manufacturing facilities.

Continued Tin Control Held Indispensable

London, Feb. 3 (AP).—Continued control of tin production is indispensable to the industry, declared John Howeson, chairman of the London Nigerian Tin Mines, at that company's annual meeting.

He stated that "with every indication pointing to a continued recovery in world-wide consumption of tin, it would be idle to underestimate the width of the gulf which still separates the present capacity of the mines and the immediate requirements of consumers.

Grain Supply Decreases.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Feb. 3.—The Chrysler Corporation announced today a "world-wide" bonus distribution, amounting to $2,300,000, to all employes. The announcement, by President K. T. Keller, said that the minimum bonus would be $30, and that $2 would be added for each year of service up to ten years.

New Deal Appoints Aid of Huey Long

By the Associated Press.

A measure of peace between the Roosevelt Administration and the Louisiana State political organization apparently was foreshadowed yesterday by an incident of patronage.

The Postoffice Department asked Representative Maloney (Democrat), Louisiana, to recommend a postmaster for Gretna, La.

Maloney, who was allied with the late Senator Huey P. Long, said he was pleasantly surprised. He explained that last year he had declined to make recommendations after learning they would have to be approved by a political faction unfriendly to him.

Maryland to Regulate Employment Agencies

Baltimore, Feb. 3 (AP).—Plans are being completed for State regulation of fee-charging employment agencies, Col. Harry C. Jones, State employment commissioner, today said.

Control of such agencies was vested in the State by an act of the 1935 General Assembly. The employment commissioner will issue licenses, and inspect the agencies' records periodically, Col. Jones said he is studying types of records now kept by more than 50 fee-charging agencies in Maryland.

WPA Worker Electrocuted

Baltimore, Feb. 3 (AP).—James H. Jordan, 58-year-old WPA worker, was electrocuted heer today when a steel measuring tape he was holding touched a high-tension wire of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. Jordan was working on a bridge-repairing project here. He was knocked from the bridge, and was pronounced dead at a hospital. He is survived by his widow and a son.

On the Air Today

RADIO news, like bananas, seems to come in bunches. Having been in Frederick all day yesterday, looking over the studios of the new WFMD, I returned to find numerous notes and telephone numbers.

Apparently Mr. Al Waldron is in town. It seems that Mr. Waldron is a Fox Movietone cameraman who has been seeing action in Ethiopia and has returned with a mess of intriguing stories of the Italo-Ethiopian ruckus. For exampe, a note from WOL reads:

"Bob Hurleigh wil lhave as his guest at 5:30, Alfred Waldron, jr., who spent six months in the interior of Ethiopia (and so on and so on)."

Then came word from WJSV: "At 6:45 we will present Alfred Waldron (and so on and so on—about the Fox Movieton, et cetera).

I guess that will bring you up to date on the African front for one day.

WJSV also has two other tricks in its bag. At 11:45 a. m., Phil Lampkin begins a new twice-a-week series of talks entitled "Musically Speaking." It is Conductor Lampkin's intention to answer, or try to, at least, all questions on music, from what is a scherzo, and why, to how do you go about eliminating composers of "round-and-round" songs.

At 11:15 p. m., the big attraction of the day for WJSV is heralded. It's a quarter-hour of something new and novel. Entitled "The Love Girl." I've heard about the new "find" even though I haven't heard her, so I shall not attempt to describe what it's al labout. I simply shall listen for myself.

After a month on the air, "Maryland's newest radio station" seems to be hitting its stride. WFMD, in case you haven't heard any programs as yet, is broadcasting on a frequency of 900 kilocycles, which means that it is to be found on your dials quite close to WRC. But daytime only. Dick (Hotcha) Gardner is the piece de resistance of the music staff right now. Maestro Gardner and his band are getting caught up in their arrangements and doing a lot of practicing for the spring season—and playing regularly for WFMD listeners. And a very genial young man named Middleton is conducting the morning recorded period—with the aid of several goldfish and plenty of imagination.

George Burns and Gracie Allen will entertain the distinguished gathering tonight at the Vice President's dinner to the President. Just think what will happen to the matters of state, already beyond the understanding of most of us poor laymen, when Gracie gets to work on them!

Postal Editor Speaks At Hagerstown Meeting

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 3.—District of Columbia postoffice clerks have been invited to join the Maryland State branch of the National Society of Postoffice Clerks, organized here yesterday. The election of officers will be held next month. Postoffice clerks from most cities and towns in western Maryland were present. Leo Bowers, Baltimore, presided.

The American Federation of Labor was described at the meeting as a "disruptionist organization, instead of one that organizes," by Thomas P. Bussier, editor of the Postoffice Clerk, official organ of the national association.

A ladies' auxiliary of the society was also organized.
